Truce Teams Go Friday

Bombed Bus

SAIGON — The first 24 members of the four-power Vietnam truce observer team will disperse into the South Vietnamese countryside Friday, according to Michael Gauvin, head of the Canadian contingent.

The observers are being assigned posts despite the number of ceasefire violations being reported from different parts of the country. Heavy fighting is continuing in the northern provinces, but the number of attacks and counterattacks is decreasing.

The Saigon command said there were 188 Communist attacks during the 24 hours ending at 6 a.m. today, compared with 209 in the previous 24 hours, 311 in the 24 hours before that and 426 in the first 22 hours after the ceasefire went into effect.

Gauvin, acting chairman of the supervisory body, said inspection teams will be sent to three centres across South Vietnam.

Gauvin said three teams of eight soldiers each will visit facilities in Hue and Da Nang in northern South Vietnam and Pleiku in the central highlands.

Each team consists of two soldiers from each commission member country.

The three sites are among seven regional centres established under the Paris peace agreement for supervising the ceasefire.

The 130 Canadian troops and their supervisors have been ready to go into the field since Monday but their departure has been delayed by the lack of safeguards.

A delegation at the deputy head level was to meet today with representatives of the North Vietnam and Viet Cong delegations to the JMC, the first such meeting it has been possible to arrange.

A full meeting, at the ambassador level, was expected later in the day.

The ICCS met Wednesday with the other members of the JMC — the U.S. and South Vietnamese.

Gauvin has described the meetings with the Americans and South Vietnamese as "most satisfactory."

Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam of South Vietnam returned from Paris and Washington and said he believes the fighting will stop once the international truce teams are in place.

He said if there is a large North Vietnamese invasion, "the countries in the agreement are committed to act but it is up to them to decide what to do."

Six chartered jetliners carried about 1,200 U.S. servicemen home today, dropping U.S. troop strength in Vietnam below the 20,000 mark, the U.S. command said.

Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai accused the U.S. today of failing to stop its "war of aggression" against Cambodia and Laos despite signing the Vietnam peace agreement.

The premier, speaking at a Peking banquet honoring North Vietnamese chief negotiator LeDuc Tho and Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Thrinh, said he hopes the U.S. government and Saigon authorities will "refrain from procrastination, expansion and sabbotage" so that the peace agreement might be turned into a reality.

Meanwhile, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the exiled Cambodian leader, has decided to order his armed forces to stop all offensive attacks and has stated his readiness to reconcile himself with the U.S., Communist diplomatic sources said today.

Industry Boost Pledged

Trade Minister Alex Macdonald said Wednesday in the legislature he considers the price of concrete "excessively high" and added: "I think another cement industry is a perfectly feasible enterprise for B.C. to engage in . . .

"We have the limestone and we have a need for competition," he told the house.

He promised that all opportunities for developing secondary industry on the basis of resources now largely unexploited will be closely examined.

For example, he said the province is sitting on a "gold mine of peat", with large reserves on the Lower Mainland and in the Queen Charlotte Islands. This could prove to be of great importance to the province in creating jobs and export dollars.

Macdonald's comments came as he announced details of a "spanking new" department and new strategy to meet the pressing need for industrial reserves in the province.

DENIES HINT

The latter policy, he said, could extend to the building of warehouse and other facilities on fully-serviced sites which would be available on a lease basis where industrial operations are "logically able to survive."

Later, outside the house, the minister denied that he was hinting the government might enter the concrete business directly. He said he was only illustrating a case where the proposed industrial development corporation would be able to initiate action to help new enterprises.

On another aspect of the government's industrial philosophy, the minister said there will be emphasis on dispersing secondary industry throughout the province, to ensure that it doesn't all concentrate on the Lower Mainland.

Wherever possible, the new corporation would try to assist industries wishing to locate in the province's small towns, such as McBride, which would otherwise "go down the drain one by one" in 20 or 30 years' time.

ADVISORY BODY

Macdonald also announced the formation of a Pacific Council, by the governments of B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan, which will advise them "how to break the bottlenecks in the transportation system."

He said the councils' role in this field will be to study and advise on the transportation of grain, potash, sulphur, coal and other commodities and to concert the efforts of the western provinces where there are common problems.

Certainly, he added, such a problem does exist in terms of the present "freight rate discrimination against the West."

Macdonald's statement on the formation of the new body followed discussions he held earlier in January with Roy Romanow, Saskatchewan's attorney-general, and with Fred Peacock, minister of industry and commerce in Alberta.

Ulster IRA, UDA Heading Toward All-Out Warfare

BELFAST (AP) — Three teen-agers bombed a busload of Roman Catholic workers in a Belfast suburb today, killing one and injuring nine, as Northern Ireland's Catholic and Protestant guerrillas squared off for all-out war against each other.

Eyewitnesses said the three youths waved down the bus as it was on its way to the site of a new Catholic school. When it stopped, they threw the bomb inside, then escaped.

The bombing raised to 697 the confirmed death toll in 3½ years of religious warfare in Northern Ireland.

The militant Protestants of the Ulster Defence Association announced Tuesday that because of Irish Republican Army "provocations," they could no longer hold Protestant extremists in check and would not try.

The Catholics of the Irish Republican Army replied that they would take "ruthless retaliatory action" for the killing of Catholics. The Ulster Defence Association said this was "a virtual declaration of war."

Gunmen have killed five persons in Belfast since Monday. Four were Catholics, and three of those were teen-agers. The fifth was an Ulster Defence Association member.

Two other Catholic teen-agers and a Protestant police officer and his nine-year-old daughter are in hospitals with serious bullet wounds.

The Irish Republican Army accused the Ulster Defence Association of giving a green light to sectarian killings "on the scale hitherto unknown." It said: "A new phase of sectarian killings will not be tolerated. The IRA will utilize all its resources to end sectarian killings for all time."

The Ulster Defence Association said the Irish Republican Army men are murderers and hypocrites, and "we will not permit them to thrive."

"The thunder clouds are gathering, and here are the first flashes of lightning," said one security officer.

The assassins continued working Wednesday night.

A cry of "Hey you!" halted a 17-year-old Catholic boy walking home in Belfast. When he turned, a gunman shot him in the stomach. His condition today was critical.

A police officer was shot in the back as he parked his car at his home in Downpatrick, County Down. Stray bullets went through a window of the house and hit his nine-year-old daughter. Both were in serious condition.

Nishga Case Not Over

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The federal government intends to send a ruling of the Supreme Court on Indian land rights back into the lap of the top court.

Justice Minister Otto Lang told the Commons Wednesday that he was dissatisfied with the split by seven members of the Supreme Court on the claim to northern land by the Nishga tribe and he intended to press Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien to demand that the matter be brought up again — this time before the full nine-justice court.

Former prime minister John Diefenbaker had earlier asked the government to refer the question to a full bench "so this question can be settled once and for all."

Diefenbaker said the decision by the seven was not conclusive because three of the judges denied the appeal on its merits and three upheld it.

The seventh judge, Mr. Justice Louis-Philippe Pigeon, rejected the appeal on the technical grounds that it could come before the court only with the authorization of the lieutenant-governor of the province and this had not been obtained.

Wally Firth (NDP—Northwest Territories), a Metis, again asked the government to adopt as its own his motion to form a Commons committee that would investigate Indian land claims.

As a motion from a private member, it is doubtful if the move would ever be debated in this session of Parliament.

Government House leader Allan MacEachen said he would confer with Chretien soon on Firth's suggestion.

Frank Howard (NDP—Skeena) moved in the Commons for a special debate on the Nishga decision.

He said the judgment had implications far beyond British Columbia.

Some civil rights experts have called the Nishga case one of the strongest for aboriginal rights because the B.C.

Hanoi Aid Terms

By MURREY MARDER
Washington Post

(Marder has just returned from a two-week reporting trip to North Vietnam. He was the only American newsman in that country when the ceasefire was announced.)

WASHINGTON — North Vietnam is anxious for foreign aid to help re-build its war-ravaged economy. But its war psychosis is still very much in evidence. In peace as in war, its officials emphasize, "no one will be permitted to infringe on our sovereignty."

The White House announcement Wednesday that presidential adviser Henry Kissinger will visit Hanoi Feb. 10-13 to discuss postwar relationships between the two nations is a swift move to begin healing the wounds of war. North Vietnam's leadership is evidently eager to begin the repair process quickly — for multiple reasons of its own.

Nothing more graphically issustrates the totally pragmatic and adaptive policies of North Vietnam when it decides that its vital interests are at stake than the decision of its leadership to receive Kissinger so quickly in their war-battered capital.

"Right now, throughout Hanoi and most of the cities, towns and villages of North Vietnam, flamingly-illustrated billboards, banners and posters condemn President Nixon as the arch-criminal of the war. On some of the posters,

FULL RENT CURBS SET BY QUEBEC

QUEBEC (CP) — All rental housing in Quebec will be subject to rent controls in 1973 under legislation to be presented in the national assembly when it reconvenes Feb. 20, Justice Minister Jerome Choquette said Wednesday.

Choquette said the legislation resulted from "a very considerable number" of rent increases across the province.

In Montreal Tuesday a spokesman at the local rental control board office said more than 50,000 calls have poured into his office since Jan. 5 from tenants protesting rent hikes of up to 50 per cent.

Choquette told a news conference the bill, called a "law to prevent abusive increases in rents in 1973," will enable tenants who feel they are facing unnreasonable increases to take their case before a Quebec Rental Board.

The board, already in existence, is authorized to conciliate landlord-tenant disputes and knock down any rent increases it finds unjustified.

The rental board, which considers such things as improvements to the property and money laid out for such improvements, local economic conditions, the condition of the building and tax changes, can grant the rent increase asked by the landlord, order him to continue to provide the premises at the old rent, or set the rental at any figure between the old and the new, the justice minister said.

Bilingualism: Passing Frill?

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Too many top federal administrators continue to view bilingualism as a "passing and exceptional frill, a luxury to be tacked on to regular budgets only if normal operating budgets allow it," Keith Spicer, Commissioner of Official Languages, says in a report to Parliament released Wednesday.

And Spicer provides readers of his almost 600-page-long and, of course, bilingual report with some spicy examples of this attitude that would sour the heart of Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson.

For example, there was one department which had the seeming audacity to ask treasury board in 1972 for an additional $120,000 for bilingual signs.

Spicer adds that this request was presumably based on the premise that nowhere in the department's more-than-$300-million budget for 1971-72 could this "relatively modest sum be squeezed out."

Though not within his jurisdiction, Spicer dwelt on teaching second-language skills in Canada, and called it "a country-wide catastrophe."

Funds given the provinces to help pay for language training, to reach $300 million by 1974, have not produced the desired result, the report says, and Spicer has received many complaints about misuse of such funds by the provinces.

To help improve language-teaching programs Spicer suggests formation of a "linguistic volunteer corps" of students to act as native-speaking assistants to language teachers, an idea used successfully in West Germany and France.

The federal government is considering a pilot program of 200 such volunteers who would receive about $3,500 a year each, the report says.

Another department cited by Spicer, with a yearly operating budget exceeding $120 million, "begged the treasury board for $26,000 to produce, gradually of course, some bilingual forms."

Spicer suggests treasury board allow departments and agencies to dip into a special bilingualism fund. But at the same time federal departments and agencies should be expected to plan bilingualism into their normal operating budget.

Spicer also strongly suggests that the departmental bilingual advisers be given more status and that their expertise be used more by federal administrators. Perhaps they could be made special adviser to each deputy minister. This upgrading would help integrate bilingualism into all operational programs, he suggests.

Spicer also said Western Canadians are not taking the federal government's bilingualism policy quite as seriously as they should be.

A French-Canadian in Vancouver claimed he failed his driver's test because he did not understand English well enough.

And French-Canadians in Alberta and British Columbia complained about the lack of French language service from Alberta Government Telephones and the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Spicer said he received a 5,000-signature petition demanding French television service for the Peace River area of Alberta. Action is being taken on the request and residents should have that service "in the near future."

BLOW FOR CONCORDE

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines announced Wednesday that they will not exercise their options to buy 13 Concordes, thus dealing the Anglo-French supersonic jet project a crippling and possibly fatal blow.

The action is expected to lead American Airlines and Eastern Air Lines — with a total of 11 options — to drop out also.

That leaves other airlines with options on 30. But the lack of competitive pressure from U.S. airlines is likely to cause some or all of them to cancel as well.

So far, the Concorde's manufacturers say they have firm orders for 14 models at $80 million: five from the British Overseas Airways Corp., four from Air France, three from China and two from Iran.

But with the moves by Pan Am and TWA, options to purchase a total of 23 planes now have been cancelled. United previously dropped its plans to buy six and Air Canada scrapped orders for four.

Prime Minister Edward Heath of Britain, now on a visit to Washington and reported to be disappointed at the Pan Am and TWA decisions, is expected to plead with President Nixon to grant U.S. landing rights for Concorde.

Heath declined to comment Wednesday on the decisions by the two airlines, but British sources in Washington said he retains his faith in the plane and continues to believe it will be a commercial success.

The British-French project has cost $2.5 billion so far.

Higher Pensions Likely For Vets

OTTAWA (CP) — A report of a study group that recommends a substantial increase in payments to the 153,285 Canadians receiving war-veterans' pensions was tabled in the Commons Wednesday.

If the report's recommendations are adopted, and Veterans Affairs Minister Daniel MacDonald has indicated he favors them, the basic 100-per-cent disability pension would go up to about $4,500 annually from about $3,900.

This would match the take-home pay of a composite group of unskilled public service employees and woud cost the government about $54 million more in 1973.

The report is the work of a group representing veterans' organizations, the veterans' department and the Canadian Pension Commission.

David Hunter of Vancouver, a national vice-president of the Royal Canadian Legion and national chairman of the legion's veterans' welfare advisory committee, says legion members are "very happy" with the recommendations.

"It will end a lot of frustration for some of these poor fellows that have been waiting for 35 or 40 years," he says.

He says former Veterans Affairs Minister Arthur Laing, who ordered the study, "was the first minister who handled the problem in 35 years in a proper manner."

Hunter and legion national president Bob Smellie of Winnipeg met with Laing and officials from his department last June.

Hunter says the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission, deputy minister for veterans' affairs and other senior officials met twice weekly from June until the end of September in order to speed up action on the pension-lag.

HOPPERS TOO HEAVY

OTTAWA (CP) — Two thousand big grain-carrying hopper cars purchased last year by the government for $48 million can travel on only half the railway tracks in Western Canada, the Commons estimates committee was told Wednesday.

W. E. Jarvis, co-ordinator of the industry department's grains group, said that "something less than half the tracks can carry the cars once they are full of grain. The other half cannot take the weight of a full car."

He assured the committee, however, that CN and CP Rail can use other grain-carrying cars to move grain from places where the new cars cannot be used.

'Close Book of Life Quickly'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — "Let us close the book of life for the transgressor quickly, cleanly and finally," said Ian Arrol (PC — York East) Wednesday.

Using some of the most dramatic language so far in the Commons capital punishment debate, he called for a return of the death penalty — not necessarily hanging, if people object to that mode of execution.

He urged an end to what he termed twisted social values that give the criminal the break.

Another of the 35 MPs who have spoken in the debate on a government bill to extend the partial ban on capital punishment was Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro.

Munro told the Commons in his maiden speech that the government had missed the message" of the last election.

Not only were the Canadian people annoyed at taxation and economic policies, he said, but also they were urging the return of capital punishment.

"Our women folk can no longer go out in the evening to post a letter," he said.

"Petty larceny, assault with violence, muggings and purse snatchings are on the increase."

His constituents were annoyed, he added.

"They are against the do-gooders and consultants being hoodwinked by a bunch of smart con-men into getting early paroles or leave passes on compassionate grounds.

"Where does compassion lie? What compassion had these miscreants when they snatched a purse from an elderly lady who had just cashed her pension cheque, or when they mutilated little girls and left them abandoned beside the road to be found by heartsick parents and angry neighbors?"

Since Friday when the debate started there have been 35 speakers, 21 for abolition of capital punishment and 14 for retention. There have been some qualifications.

It is expected there will be a free vote next week, perhaps Monday, on the bill that would suspend hanging for all killers except those of policemen and prison guards.

Jean-Marie Bolsvert (SC — Drummond) also said he would vote against the bill, while Antonio Thoms (L — Montreal Maisonneuve-Rosemont) said he wants capital punishment retained for premeditated murder.

Lloyd Crouse (PC — South Shore) said he has been a retentionist for years but would consider supporting a bill that would abolish hanging but put killers in jail for life.

John Reid (L — Kenora-Rainy River) said he has been an abolitionist but is concerned for the feeling of insecurity of the public about the release of prisoners on parole and on leave.

Cement, Peat Studied

He said B.C.'s share of financing the PTAC will be $30,000 annually, and the body is also partly supported by the National Harbors Board and Canadian National and Canadian Pacific

Macdonald said his "completely rejuvenated" department, formerly known as the department of industrial development, trade and commerce, will be retitled the department of industry and trade promotion.

It would have three new branches — promotion, business research and information.

He said the promotion branch would be responsible for promoting industrial development and trade, finding industrial prospects, identifiying products in which B.C. has a natural advantage, identifying the market for those products and then "going out with trade missions to sell."

SPECIAL PROJECTS

The business research branch would investigate industrial opportunities, carry out special projects, market studies and feasibility studies. It would also, he hoped, list the "10 most wanted industries in B.C."

He added: "Based on that kind of research, I think we can help to bring to this province the kind of industries we need."

The minister said another section of the department, an industry branch based in Vancouver, would be charged with maintaining regular contact with all businesses in the province, even if that meant only an annual courtesy call or an inquiry to see if technical, financial or promotion expertise were needed.

Tongue firmly in cheek, Macdonald told the house he hopes his department will be a "modern, dynamic department of industry and trade promotion which will have awakened from a long slumber . . raucously alive and electric with vitality."

When someone from the opposite side of the house asked if he would consider hiring "Waldo" (former Social Credit trade and commerce minister, Waldo Skillings) he replied that he didn't want to comment on his predecessor.

But he added, without pause: "I hope I don't let failure go to my head."

Referring to the chronic shortage of land available for industrial development, Macdonald said there was a "tremendous inflation" in land values and mentioned areas of the Fraser Valley which has risen swiftly in price from an average $9,000 per acre to $12,000 or $13,000.

He said he hopes the industrial development corporation which the government proposes to establish will acquire land to provide industrial sites in co-operation with municipalities.

Where necessary, these could be developed in advance with buildings and other facilities.

Hanoi Guards Sovereignty

the X in the president's name is in the form of a Fascist Swastika. It will be interesting to see if any of these banners demanding retaliatory repayment for the "blood debt" of American war damage are taken down when the president's personal emissary arrives in Hanoi.

In Hanoi last week, officials would speak only guardedly of their desires and plans for postwar reconstruction aid. Some officials conceded that their plans are only fragmentary at the present time, for as one said: "We are still digging our dead out of the rubble of American war damage."

One dominant theme pervaded every discussion of postwar reconstruction:

"We Vietnamese will make the decisions for ourselves, as we always have done."

North Vietnam has balanced so delicately in its relations with even its main Communist supporters, the Soviet Union and China, that they, too, are held at arms length even when their technicians and military advisers are working with North Vietnamese.

The extent of war damage to North Vietnam is so vast that a considerable effort will be required even to assess accurately what needs to be repaired, or demolished and rebuilt from the ground up. The heaviest damage is most recent, from the 12 days of massive bombing of the Hanoi-Haiphong region from Dec. 18 to 29 by B-52s and other aircraft, except for a 36-hour Christmas interlude.

Current, embryonic attempts at "reconstruction" are concentrated on assembling bamboo sections of houses and shipping them into the cities and towns, along with oiled paper and poles to improvise residences to augment mud huts with thatched roofs, and houses built of bricks simply piled on top of each other without mortar.

The determination remains to rebuild only "in Vietnamese way." Questions about possible teams of foreign technicians, or plans for mass reconstruction of modernized cities, bring quick disclaimers: "We do not want cosmopolitan centers. Hanoi is not Tokyo. We want to keep Vietnam, Vietnam."

Courts to Reconsider Nishgas

While the decision is a severe setback for Indian claims, non-treaty Indians in other provinces base their land rights on different facts and circumstances.

So the issue is far from being dead legally.

Mr. Justice Wilfred Judson, writing reasons for himself and Mr. Justices Roland Ritchie and Ronald Martland, said the Nishgas did not come under the Royal Proclamation, known as the Indian bill of rights.

Judge Judson said it was obvious that the area claimed by the Nishga wasn't covered by the proclamation.

The territory, he said, came under British control only in 1846 with the signing by Great Britain and the United States of the Treaty of Oregon.

"The Oregon Treaty was, in effect, a treaty of cession, whereby U.S. claims were ceded to Great Britain," he said.

"There was no mention of Indian rights in any of the conventions or the treaty."

He also said that the terms of union, under which B.C. entered Confederation, called for land — reserves — to be transferred to the national government for use by Indians.

Meanwhile, a protest from Nishga band leader Frank Calder, a minister without portfolio in the Barrett government has been quashed even before it got properly underway.

Calder said Wednesday that in light of the Supreme Court decision, the band "intended to go right to the top" and carry its fight to the World Court at The Hague.

However, a spokesman for the international court said today such a move could not be considered.

"Only governments may be parties to cases before the court," he said.

"The court is not open to private individuals and has always refused to entertain petitions and requests addressed to it by individuals," he added, pointing out that such private requests were fairly common from people not versed in the intricacies of international law.

In Vancouver, Phillip Paul, a member of the executive council of the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs, said the decision was almost certain to increase tension between Indians and whites.

"It is a situation that is at the base root of the Indian and white conflict."

He said the decision involved not only the Nishga tribe, but the entire Indian concept of the white man's justice, and makes "a mockery of the principles expounded in the federal government's Indian white paper of 1969."

Gabriola Warns of Disaster In Plan to Switch Ferries

The provincial highways department's plan to build a connecting bridge between Vancouver Island and Gabriola Island and a ferry terminal on Gabriola could result in disaster.

This was the reaction Wednesday of Dr. James Tyhurst, member of the island's planning commission, after he met Highways Minister Bob Strachan and the area's MLA David Stupich, to discuss the plans.

"If it happens," Tyhurst said, "it would be a local disaster and it could also lead to the wipe-out of the Gulf Islands as a whole."

Tyhurst said he did not want to give details of his talk with Strachan until he had met with other members of the planning commission, the only elected body on the island, which is unorganized territory.

Strachan said in the Legislature Tuesday that a Gabriola Island-Steveston area ferry would probably replace the Departure Bay-Horseshoe Bay run within four years.

Tyhurst said Wednesday that although "total ecological protection" has been promised Gabriola he couldn't see how the area could not suffer from a large ferry terminal and a major highway.

He said the proposed terminal area contains a large marine section and clam beds which could not fail to be hurt by ferries. The highway, he said, would run through undeveloped land and farmland.

He expressed disappointment that the Island's commission had not been consulted before this.

Jim Kavanaugh, chairman of the seven-man commission anticipates that the commission will join a ratepayers' association in opposing the scheme.

He believes that the island's 1,400 residents are against the island become a link between Vancouver Island and the Mainland.

Once Gabriola is within commuting time of Vancouver, he said, the rise in numbers of people and cars would trigger environmental damage.

The NDP MLAs for the areas which will be affected by a terminal at Steveston in Richmond have also expressed opposition to the plans.

Harold Steves (NDP for Richmond) said putting ferries into the small fishing community on the south arm of the Fraser River would "destroy the marine habitat of Sturgeon Banks, which is an integral part of the Pacific flyway and offshore feeding ground for young salmon."

He deplored the prospect of "several million cars a year driving through quiet residential streets."

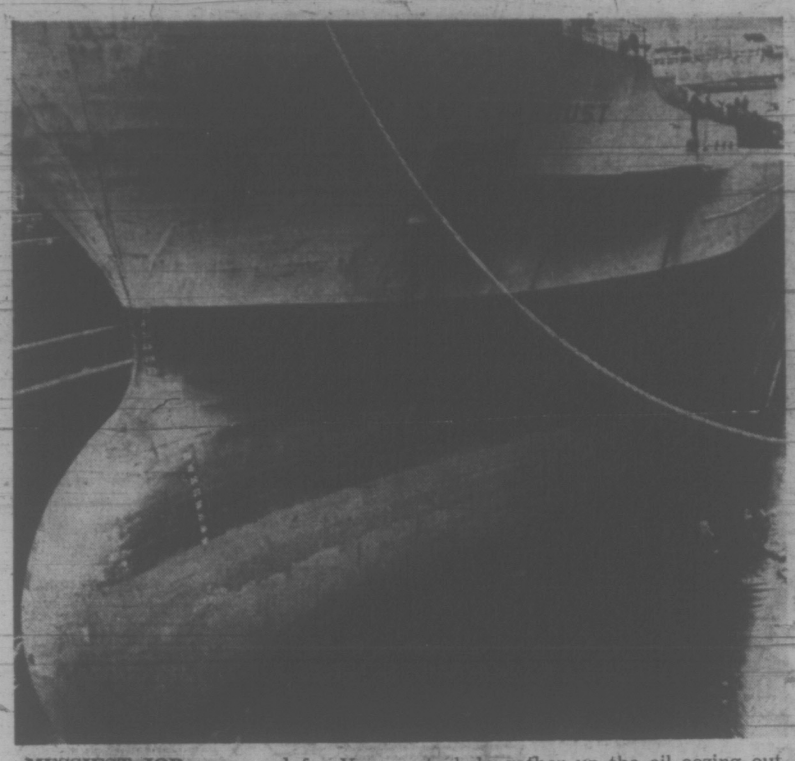
Carl Liden, MLA for Delta, anticipated problems with the ferries and fishermen, who set their nets off the south arm at night.

Both he and Steves urged that the terminal be locacted on Iona Island on the river's north arm because that site is "already degraded by pollution from the Iona Island sewer plant and log storage in the north arm."

Strachan said Wednesday that relocating the ferry terminals will cost about $40 million but savings from the proposed shorter route will pay for the relocation in less than 30 years.

A $1.5 million annual saving would be due to 50-minute shorter crossing times, reducing cost of wages and fuel, he said.

Strachan said the possibility of locating a terminal at Iona will be considered by Swan Wooster Engineering of Vancouver, in a feasibility study. He expects to receive the study's findings in two months. Strachan said $12.5 million construction plans to enlarge the Departure Bay and Horseshoe Bay terminals have been cancelled.



MESSIEST JOB on record for Yarrows Ltd. crews began last night and continued today as they mopped up crude bunker oil still leaking from the freighter Irish Stardust, which entered the Esquimalt Graving Dock Wednesday. Bales of hay were used to help gather up the oil oozing out from the ship's punctured port side. Survey of the damage done to the freighter when she hit Haddington Island is hoped to be undertaken today. Charges have been laid against both the ship and her captain.

Oil Spill Committee For B.C.

A special legislative committee has been established by the provincial government to investigate the problem of oil spills in B.C. coastal waters.

A motion to that effect, moved by Premier Barrett was passed in the house Wednesday. There was no debate.

The special committee, will place "particular emphasis upon join action with the state of Washington" and will make recommendations to the legislature.

It will be empowered to call witnesses and ask for submissions from any organization or individuals it wishes.

$1 BUYS ENGINE FOR B.C. GOV'T

The locomotive has been in use in the B.C. logging industry since 1927.

The deal for the locomotive was completed in a letter sent last week from M-B president Robert Bonner to Premier Barrett. In the letter Bonner accepts the bid of $1, which had been sent earlier by Barrett to a company official.

In a letter Barrett sent to Bonner, the premier said his bid of a one-dollar bill is "additional proof of our government's businesslike approach to problems."

Barrett said he hoped his bid would be accepted "in the name of public service."

The locomotive will be exhibited around the province as part of a Provincial Museum project. The museum is interested in obtaining several other old railway cars as part of the exhibit.

ARCHITECT GIVEN HARBOR BACKGROUND

Prize-winning architect Arthur Erickson of Vancouver had a three-hour meeting with civic officials Wednesday to discuss the future of Victoria Inner Harbor.

It was the first of a series of meetings in Erickson's $35,000 commission to produce a comprehensive study on redevelopment of the predominantly industrial area.

Erickson said after the meeting he had been presented with a large amount of background material by heads of administrative departments.

The architect says his study will be "three-dimensional" and designed to integrate future development of the Inner Harbor. He expects his work to be completed within a few months.

New Governor Named to Bank

OTTAWA (CP) — Gerald K. Bouey, 52, has been appointed governor of the Bank of Canada it was announced today.

Mr. Bouey, who has been senior deputy governor since Jan. 1, succeeds Louis Rasminsky, who retired today at the age of 65.

Concurrent with his seven-year term as governor, Mr. Bouey becomes president of the Industrial Development Bank. He has been a member of the board of directors and the executive committee of both institutions since his appointment as senior deputy governor.

Mr. Bouey served as deputy governor of the Bank of Canada from 1969 to 1971, with major responsibility for the Bank's open market operations, debt management activities and supervision of capital markets.

He was an adviser to the governors from 1965 to 1969, and has had close contacts throughout the period with the chartered banks, investment dealers and financial institutions.

He was born in Axford, Sask., and grew up in the Weyburn area.

NUMEROUS MEETINGS

Although most of his career has been in domestic monetary and economic affairs, Bouey has represented the bank at numerous meetings of central bankers in the United States and Europe, the bank's announcement said.

In association with the finance department, the Bank of Canada is responsible for setting the domestic money supply, adjusting interest rates and credit conditions and maintaining the value of the Canadian dollar in world money markets.

At the age of 16 he got his first banking job with the Royal Bank of Canada in Weyburn. He served in bomber command of the RCAF during the Second World War, discharged with the rank of flight lieutenant.

The Powers That Be

Premier Barrett's proposed review board for gasoline and fuel oil prices is the type of control which can best be assessed in operation rather than in theory. It is an in-character move for the NDP government to bring such a project forward, and the adverse reaction of the oil industry is equally to be expected. Somewhere in between these powerful forces, the consumer may benefit through having the oil companies required to justify price increases before a public board; or he may, as industry spokesmen claim, find that prices will go up regardless, and that the service provided will decline.

The oil men are right in noting that whereas public utilities such as telephones or hydro are monopolies and require regulation to protect the consumer, the existing gasoline industry is highly competitive and presents a different market situation. The consumer may not be as ready to agree that the competitive factor ensures that prices will be kept to a minimum. He sees the large oil companies acting simultaneously, in many cases, in announcing gasoline price increases, and wonders at the companies' explanation that their costs have also risen simultaneously.

The explanation may well be correct, since the conditions governing sources of supply and of delivery are in most cases closely parallel. But the consumer, acknowledging these facts, still has no guarantee that prices could not be lower than they are, and he wonders at the unanimity of price-setting even to the tenth of a cent.

The milk industry's controlled prices do not furnish a parallel, since protection of the producer is as much a part of the system as protection of the consumer. The oil industry could hardly be said to require such protection.

Premier Barrett does not limit his concept of price control to gasoline and heating oil. He foresees electricity, natural gas and additional oil produets coming under the supervision of an energy board which eventually would have jurisdiction over "all essential services".

That is an open-ended proposal suggesting a breadth of governmental control which could have important effects, not only on the protection of consumers, but on the future of industry in this province. It envisions a socialistic approach to industry which — British Columbia's industry being mainly involved in world markets — could create problems not always foreseen by reformers. The evolution of a vast bureaucracy could be one side effect of such an overall system.

Some of British Columbia's government ventures today are of an experimental, trial-and-error nature, as Mr. Barrett from time to time implies. We can hope that the people's leaders will not bite off more than the people can chew.

Time to Shore Up Controls

The historic significance of Canada's signing of the Halibut Treaty with the United States is widely recognized. By insisting that this country's representatives should sign alone for the nation, Canada marked a coming of age. The practical importance of the pact is appreciated for far different reasons. By regulating catches within the waters they controlled, Canada and the United States saved this major food species from the threat of extinction.

Observing quotas, the two countries built up the stock to a point where it could again support a major fishery. For years the procedure represented one of the triumphs of conservation under the regulation of the International Pacific Halibut Commission, with three members each from Canada and the United States.

In the last year or two the stocks have fallen again. Commission Director Bernard Scud, of Seattle, announced the other day that 1972 catches in Canadian and U.S. controlled waters touched a 30-year low. As a result the commission will reduce by two million pounds the catch Canadian and U.S. fishermen will be allowed this year.

"The commission is extremely concerned about continuing low stocks and believes this condition is due in a large part to intensive foreign fishing", the commissioner says, adding that some fillets from Japan marketed on this continent were from fish "less than the minimum size agreed to by the North Pacific Fisheries convention".

Strong representations are to be made to Canadian and American governments urging measures to prevent "further violations" by Japanese fishermen.

Action on the issue should be persuasive. Fifty years ago Canada and the United States acted in concert to save a fishery and succeeded to the point where their effort became a model. Now, as serious depletion continues, the time has arrived to renew and add muscle to the rehabilitation effort. Without it, the lucrative halibut haul off the northwest coast of this continent could decline to the point that caused the emergency cooperative controls of 1923. Japanese, no less than North American, fishermen should understand what that means in terms of self-interest.

Burnaby's Moral 'Typhoid Mary'

The image of British Columbia is once again being disfigured by the distribution of racial hate literature, this time from an organization listing a post office box in Burnaby and aimed at MLA Rosemary Brown.

Apart from inflicting the customary discomfort of poison pen letters on a person of normal sensitivities, it is doubtful that the material will hurt Ms. Brown. But it does hurt British Columbia.

Distribution of hate literature harms the region from which it comes. Its existence is clear evidence of a very unhealthy situation — the presence of a moral Typhoid Mary, so to speak — in our society.

Over-all, it paints a wart on the nose of "beautiful British Columbia" if nothing else.

The MLA has understandably turned the material over to the Attorney-General for consideration. Perhaps it would have been more appropriate to refer the issue to the department of health. Racism of this kind is probably more an illness than a crime.

HAROLD GREER

Bail: The Easy Way Out

TORONTO — The murder of a Toronto policeman by a "speed" freak who had earlier been released under the Bail Reform Act has brought emotional demands that this legislation, in operation since early last year, be scrapped.

The murderer, who later killed himself in a police stakeout, was discovered to be a dedicated criminal against whom there were two warrants for failing to appear in court to answer criminal charges. He had been arrested for possession of an offensive weapon in early September and immediately released by the police on a promise to appear in court. Later that month he was charged with possession of marijuana and assaulting a police officer and again released.

The Metropolitan Toronto Police Association has as much as said the murdered policeman would be alive but for the new legislation and has invited concerned citizens to express their concern to their Members of Parliament. Chairman C. O. Bick of the Police Commission has criticized "the utterly disgraceful ease with which criminals are being permitted to abuse bail and pursue their assaults on society."

Lang Charge

Now the politicians have joined the chorus with charges and countercharges. Federal Justice Minister Otto Lang has said the Bail Reform Act is fundamentally sound and the fault lies with the provincial administration of it, going so far as to cite "resistance" to it by the police, crown attorneys and judges. Ontario Justice Secretary George Kerr has said it is the courts, not the police, who are being too liberal and has contended the Act is confusing and difficult to administer.

All of which does little to promote understanding of a very complicated problem, made more so by the tortuous way the Criminal law is written.

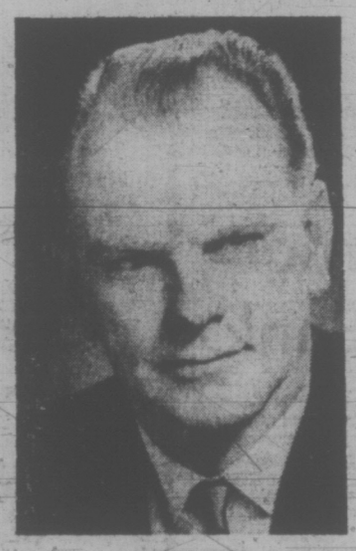
It cannot be said, for example, that David Holmes was at large to kill Constable James Lothian because of the Bail Reform Act. He might very well have obtained bail and been at large under the procedures which applied before the Bail Reform Act became operative.

As for Mr. Lang's claim of police "resistance" to the new Act, it is a strange — and serious — charge to make in the light of the available record. Last year, for example, Toronto police arrested 58,986 persons and released 27,664 of them according to the provisions of the Act. This number does not include those bailed by the courts. Such figures hardly suggest police resistance; if anything they suggest the police are being too permissive.

But Mr. Kerr says it is the courts that are being too permissive, a claim for which he has no substantiation. There are no statistics on how many persons are granted bail by the courts; there ought to be but they aren't compiled.

One statistic which is available, however, clearly indicates the Act is faulty, rather than the administration of it. Of the 27,664 persons released by Toronto police prior to court appearance, 8,727 failed to appear in court, as a result of which arrest warrants had to be issued for them. This is an astronomical ratio compared to previous experience and strongly suggests that accused persons are not taking the new procedures very seriously.

Peter McWilliams, the distinguished former Crown Attorney of Halton County, warned before the Act went into effect that this might happen. In an article in Chitty's Law Journal, he noted the substitution of weak phrases like "notice to appear" and "promise to appear" for good old-fashioned commands like "summons" and "bail". "Promises from persons accused of crimes seem to me to invite derision," Mr. McWilliams wrote.



GEORGE KERR
. . . not the police

Perhaps the basic problem with the legislation, however, and certainly the greatest cause of misunderstanding, is that the Bail Reform Act does much more than simply reform bail procedures.

"Bail" has to do with the pre-trial release, with or without conditions, of a person whom the police have in custody. The Act does indeed describe new procedures for this, but it also lays down new rules in a related matter, the means whereby accused persons are brought to court.

Generally speaking, there are three such methods: the police may get a warrant from a justice to arrest the person; they may, in certain circumstances and for certain crimes, arrest without a warrant; or they may simply issue a summons, which includes, in the new terminology, a "notice to appear".

The old Criminal Code was difficult enough to understand in this regard, as a result of which the police, while often possessing a discretion, tended to make too many arrests and not issue enough summonses. The new Code, as rewritten by the Bail Reform Act, is tortuous in the extreme and almost impossible to administer, as result of which the police have gone the other way around.

Thus Section 450 (2) tells a police officer that, usless he has a warrant, he shall not arrest a person if:

1. The offence in question is an indictable offence mentioned in section 483 of the Code.
2. If it is an offence which may be prosecuted by indictment;
3. If it is an offence punishable on summary conviction;
4. If he has "reasonable and probable" grounds to believe the identity of the person has been established;
5. If he has "reasonable and probable" grounds to believe that evidence will not be destroyed;
6. If he has "reasonable and probable" grounds to believe that another crime will not be committed;
7. If he has "no reasonable grounds", to believe that the person will fail to appear in court if he does not arrest him.

Realistic?

Is it realistic to expect most police officers to have all this knowledge, or to make the semi-judicial judgments involved? Of course not: most lawyers would be incompetent to deal with Section 450 (2). Yet this is no back-water provision: it is the section the police must apply in the most common form of law enforcement, the so-called "street" arrest.

Small wonder then that the police are inclined to use the alternative available to them of not arresting the person and issuing a "notice to appear" instead. Especially when the law tells them that if they do arrest the person, and it is subsequently established that all the above requirements were not compiled with, then they acted unlawfully and are liable to damages for false arrest.

Small wonder, too, that persons are being "released" in this manner when the public interest requires that they not be released, at least not until all the relevant information has been considered.

C. L. SULZBERGER

No Insurance, Lots of Hope

NEW YORK — The Paris agreement extricates the United States from the Indochina war and sets a pattern for possible peace between Vietnam's two halves. But, in itself, it insures neither peace nor unification of that country nor does it seem to guarantee a certain cease-fire in neighboring Laos and Cambodia.

President Nixon and his extraordinary negotiator, Henry Kissinger, have achieved an accord with Hanoi that is open-ended in the sense that it could conceivably lead either to renewed fighting or to permanent settlement. In the former contingency, Washington has stuffed South Vietnam with a massive arsenal that gives Saigon an excellent chance of surviving.

President Thieu told me last Feb. 23: "North Vietnam attacked us because of our weakness. It is a good lesson for us to remember in the future. North Vietnam will not dare to launch a new aggression against us if, after a long-term solution, we stay strong."

Thieu Prediction

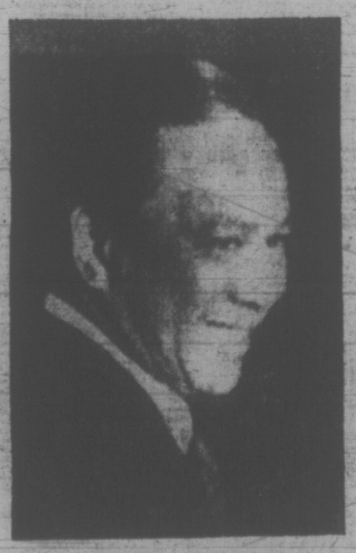
Thieu predicted Hanoi would agree to "temporary peace" and subsequently try to achieve its objective of dominating South Vietnam "over a five or six-year period." He forecast, moreover, that "some time in 1973" the Communist forces would "turn their main efforts to Laos and Cambodia, seeking a political advantage there."

Certainly no agreement has yet been made public that solves the future of Laos or Cambodia. Should Thieu's prediction materialize, it would be hard for the United States to prevent collapse of jerry-built regimes in those lands. Nixon told me on March 8, 1971: "The Nixon Doctrine says only that we will help those who help themselves." That is difficult for Vientiane or Phnom Penh to accomplish, despite any eventual subsidiary accords.

Nevertheless, whatever its shortcomings, the president realized settlement was imperative in what he described to me as "a war where there are no heroes, only goats." And what has been achieved is not unnatural. Vietnam was divided for 150 years along the existing demilitarized zone border.

The final push that terminated protracted negotiating came after Nixon broke off stalemated talks on Dec. 13, 1972. He did this because he was convinced Hanoi was playing games, twisting language in proposed draft accords, because he believed North Vietnam was planning another offensive to coincide with agreement, and because he was still having diplomatic difficulties with Saigon.

The aerial bombardment of Hanoi and Haiphong was ordered to reduce



PRESIDENT THIEU
. . . if we stay strong

chances of a new military attack by weakening its rear bases, and to serve as an implicit warning. It was assumed that, despite negative public reaction, the bombing would prove worthwhile if settlement was thereby achieved this month. It was.

Nixon's negotiating technique was interesting. He did not give precise instructions to Kissinger on a point-by-point basis. Instead he met at great length with him, between Paris sessions, to review the presidential "game plan" and discuss provisions essential to any settlement.

Then he left Kissinger on his own. The final result was an accord which was not brilliant but which was honorable and clearly not anticipated by Nixon's political opponents.

When historians look back on the unhappy conflict with less passion than contemporary analysts, they may see factors now ignored. Contrary to forecasts, it increased rather than decreased the Sino-Soviet rift. The failure to achieve a swift Communist triumph probably helped Indonesia to frustrate a Communist take-over plot. The United States lost immense popularity but, in the end, managed to retain international respect.

Unmastered Technique

American generals never wholly mastered the techniques of countering Gen. Giap's revolutionary warfare. The helicopter proved a disastrous innovation because it encouraged bad U.S. strategy. Troops arriving and departing by air could not root out a skillful enemy. The Viet Cong and North Vietnamese became adept at baiting helicopter traps.

Finally, no categorical answer was given to the primordial question: Can a free society fight a limited war? U.S. national interest waned as U.S. public impatience waxed. It proved difficult to convince soldiers (or their relatives) that it was worth fighting for an improved negotiating position in a distant, little-known country. Television, unfettered and widespread in the free world, advertised grisly horrors.

Nevertheless, with extraordinary determination, Nixon did produce a settlement, even though its final worth remains to be tested. The pull-out is not a bug-out. Whatever comes next, war or peace, it will be wholly Vietnamized with those beside whom American soldiers fought having a fair chance to defend themselves.

As a visitor to your delightful city may I suggest to your city fathers that they set up pointers on such places as Mount Tolmie so that folk may have some idea of what they have the privilege to see before them, naming the bays, extension points, important structures such as the Dominion Government Observatory, etc.

I have been driven up this hill twice, once with a stranger like myself and once with a Victorian, and I can assure you it was, with a map in hand, much more interesting when I knew what I was looking at.—A Visitor.

60 YEARS AGO

From The Times of Feb. 1, 1913:

"The Balkan states are fighting against the Turks, we are fighting against that old Turk, Mr. Asquith." With these words Miss Barbara Wylie, in her address last evening at the Alexandra Club, gave the position of the suffragette reaction at present. Miss Wylie's audience, which crowded the hall to its utmost capacity, was sympathetic and from time to time broke out into applause.

"You have only to go round some of the homes in the Midland Counties in England to find children stitching hooks and eyes on cards for hours every day to help to make the family living," Miss Wylie said. "We have child labor in England and you have it in your country."

Third Indochina War About to Begin

By CHALMERS ROBERTS
The Washington Post

We are now about to see the beginning of the third Indochina war but how it will differ in form and substance from the first and second is almost wholly unpredictable.

The first Indochina war, involving the French as the colonial power and Ho Chi Minh's Viet Minh, began in 1946 and ended with Vo Nguyen Giap's victory at Dienbienphu and the subsequent diplomatic agreements at Geneva.

The second Indochina war involving the United States began, in political terms, in 1957, and, in military terms, in 1961 and will end with the Paris accords of 1973.

The third Indochina war which lies ahead could take many forms. At worst, the accords could break down, and the fighting could resume between President Thieu's South Vietnamese and the rival indigenous Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese forces. It could conceivably be escalated by yet another American intervention, most probably by air.

Or, more probably, it could begin with a fierce political struggle between the Thieu regime and the Viet Cong's political instrument, the provisional revolutionary government. The Paris accords call for negotiations between these two parties through a new national council of reconciliation and concord but with a requirement that agreements be reached unanimously. Today one would have to rate as slim the chances that such bitter enemies, so long locked in bloody warfare, can come to any agreement on "free" elections to create a new and single government for South Vietnam.

Behind the battle of words will be military force on both sides. The Paris accords bar the use of such force and create a four-nation international supervisory force to monitor the accords. But a force of only 1,160 men, composed of four national componepts from two Communist and two non-Communist nations, would be hard pressed to do such a job if the rival groups, or any one of them, do not really want that force to perform its task.

The essential point, then, is the intent of each of the three Vietnamese signers of the Paris accords. As Henry Kissinger put it, lasting peace will depend on the "spirit" in which the provisions are implemented. People who have fought for so many years, he noted, will not easily give up their ambitions. And the rival ambitions, from the beginning of the first Indochina war, have been antithetical. One can "hope," as did Kissinger, that the hatred and animosities will be things of the past but one can hardly believe it.

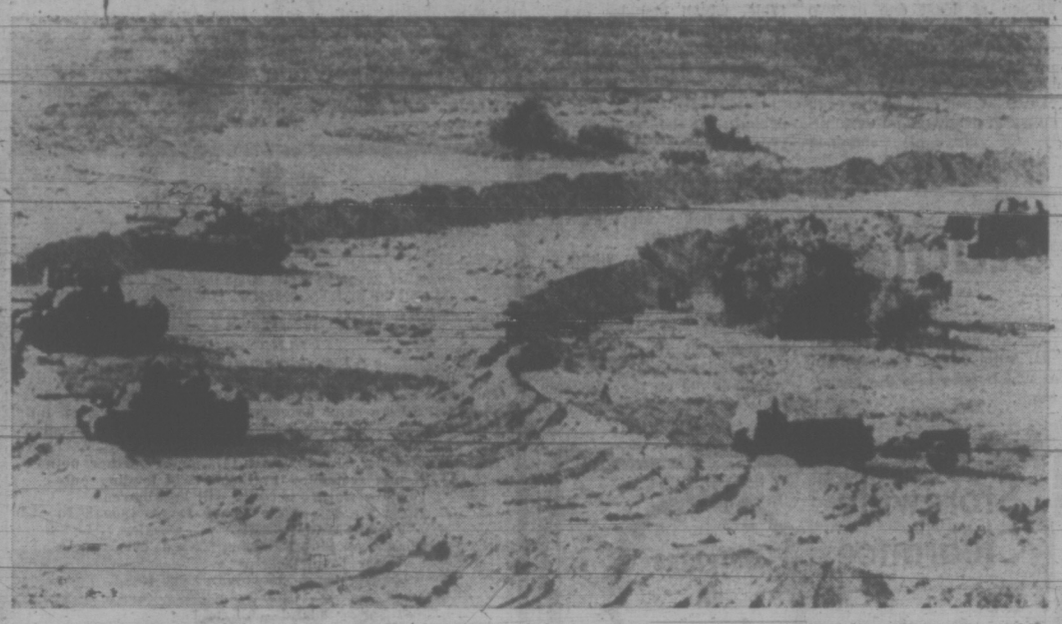
It is against such a backdrop that one must weigh the details of the Paris accords. One way to begin is to examine how they differ from the 1954 Geneva agreements and the 1962 accord about Laos.

At Geneva in 1954 three military ceasefire agreements were signed by the belligerents in Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. They provided for release of prisoners, no introduction of new forces (but some rotation was permitted), no introduction of new arms, an International Control Commission and specified points of entry.

The belligerents — the French and the North Vietnamese as far as Vietnam was concerned — agreed to establish a demilitarized zone (the DMZ of today), with the French withdrawing to the south and the Viet Minh to the north of that "buffer zone."



SOUTH VIETNAMESE armor unit last Friday preparing a position it will try to hold after ceasefire in contested area 15 miles north of Saigon. Circular perimeter was carved out of earth for tanks taking defensive positions. How long will they have to try and hold them?

On top of the three ceasefire documents was added a "final declaration" of the Geneva Conference. It listed the participants — Cambodia, North Vietnam, France, Laos, China, South Vietnam, the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States — but none of them signed the document. In fact, the Saigon government repudiated it. The U.S. issued a unilateral declaration saying that it would "refrain from the threat or use of force" to upset the three ceasefires but that it "would view any renewal of the aggression" with "grave concern."

This "final declaration" took note of the ceasefire agreements, said the "military demarcation line is provisional and should not in any way be interpreted as constituting a political or territorial boundary" and, said that "general elections should be held in July, 1956, for free expression of the national will" throughout all of Vietnam. The elections never took place.

The two sets of accords differ both as to details arising from changed military circumstances and in relation to a political process.

Yet when all is said, it is evident that there are major similarities between the 1954 Geneva accords and the 1973 Paris agreements. Each provided in detail for a subsequent political settlement. In each case the foreign western army, French and American, agreed to withdraw and the local forces agreed to a ceasefire. In each case, too, the political resolution depended on agreement between the rival Vietnamese regimes. One difference is the creation, by now, of a South Vietnamese political entity as a rival to the Saigon government that did not exist in 1954.

In each case the Communist north insisted that Vietnam as a nation is one, however long it may take to make that a reality, whereas the Saigon governments of both 1954 and 1973 insisted that South Vietnam has some form of separate sovereignty from the north.

In the case of Laos, 14 nations — the nine of Geneva, 1954, plus Burma, Canada, India, Thailand and Poland — agreed to respect Laotian neutrality after the rival Lao factions themselves agreed to abandon force, barred use of Lao territory for attacks on other nations, forbade "any foreign interference in the internal affairs" of Laos and required withdrawal of "all foreign troops" then in the country.

The 1962 Laos agreement turned out to be, in effect, the partition of the country into Communist and non-Communist areas, close to today's division. The North Vietnamese withdrew only a token number of their forces.

So, in the end, one comes back not so much to the letter of agreements, protocols and understandings but to the "spirit" in which they are carried out — or not carried out. Both Geneva 1954 and Laos 1962 produced interludes; both were followed by new warfare. There was no "spirit" of compromise, only a will to continue seeking original goals.

There are, however, two important differences between 1954 and 1973: the second Indochina war has taken massive tolls in men and wealth, and much of Indochina has been devastated. Even more important, Hanoi's two principal allies, Moscow and Peking, are in a new relationship with Washington, one that would be endangered by a breach of the Paris accords. Thus the question of the "spirit" in which the accords are implemented this time concerns far more than the weary men of Hanoi and Saigon. And this could be the crucial difference.

'People's Fleet' To Bar Tankers?

By BOB HUNTER
The Sun

When the first supertanker bearing Alaskan oil noses awkwardly into Juan de Fuca Strait, it may be in for a surprise.

There's a good chance its path will be blocked by a flotilla of Canadian boats. Pleasure boats, fishing boats, all sorts of boats.

No firm plans exist for a blockade. There is no formal organization. No strategy has been worked out. And no group has publicly put the idea forward. But there has been talk of such a blockade. And since last week's outrageous spill near Alert Bay, the talk has taken a serious turn.

The Greenpeace Foundation has been kicking the idea around since back before Amchitka. SPEC has seriously considered it. People inside the B.C. Environmental Council have been thinking about it. The Sierra Club is aware of the idea. And so are at least half a dozen other organizations, including the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union.

My own mail over the past two years has included at least five separate proposals from different people in various parts of B.C., each of them suggesting a blockade.

One yachtsman in Victoria suggested a flotilla of sailing boats which could put out from Victoria and sail in circles directly in the path of the oncoming supertanker.

A Line of Nets

A fisherman pointed out that fishing vessels could put their nets down shoulder to shoulder. Marine law traditionally requires that all vessels must give way to boats with their nets out.

Several people have suggested that money be raised to buy a vessel which could be deliberately placed in the path of a supertanker and kept there even up to the point of a collision. The persons manning the vessel could leap overboard at the last moment. (If it was a small boat, there would be no danger of the steel-hulled supertanker being damaged seriously enough to cause a spill.)

But there would be some dandy legal actions. Perhaps enough to pin the tanker people down in court battles.

Juan de Fuca Strait has been suggested as the likeliest place for a confrontation. But Haro Strait, because of its narrowness, has also been mentioned.

Supertankers are ungainly beasts. They need something like five miles in which to stop. The point of a blockade would not be an "ambush." Rather it would be well-advertised. The supertanker would know what it was going to be running into. Presumably, if there were enough Canadian vessels in the way, the larger vessel would be forced to stop. The ability of a supertanker to zig-zag is strictly limited. It wouldn't be able to simply dodge its way through.

Refuse to Budge

And there would be no legal way for U.S. authorities to force Canadian boats out of the water.

Of course, the supertanker would likely just bully its way through, forcing the smaller craft aside.

But, presumably, there would be some vessels manned by Canadians angry enough to refuse to budge.

A confrontation of this nature would force several different levels of government to react—one way or another.

Up until now, the basic Canadian reaction to the inevitability of supertanker spills along our coast has been to lie down and whimper a lot. We've snivelled in the courts. And whined in the press. And mouthed off in our legislatures. But that's all.

Not even the oil barons dare pretend that there won't be spills. Gigantic spills — larger than anything yet seen on earth. So we have a situation where our coastal waters and our territories are going to be laid to waste by foreign interests. Everybody admits it's going to happen. All our governments seem prepared to do is to rush in and lap up the mess.

Obviously, what we should do is send the Canadian Navy out to intercept them.

But since Ottawa isn't likely to do that, the job — if it's going to be done — is going to have to be done by citizens. As usual.

Canada Can Do More to Save Wildlife

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

In the course of history, that greedy and unthinking predator, Man, has brought about the extinction of hundreds of animal species once abundant and widespread on earth. He has done so for food, for greed, for comfort, for his imagined protection, for superstitious reasons and — all too commonly — merely for the thrill of killing.

Herds of majestic elephants have been slaughtered for sport or for the ivory of their tusks. The fabulous blue whale — a complex 100-ton mammal, the largest ever to live on earth — has been reduced in number from an estimated 100,000 to about 3,000 in just three decades.

The survival of whooping cranes, once almost extinct, is newly threatened. The tiger makes a dandy rug; the leopard, the ocelot, the seal are slaughtered to provide coats for vain women. In his senseless drive to destroy his environment and the creatures which co-habit "his" earth, man has paid scant heed to the consequences.

Fortunately, more and more voices are being raised against senseless destruction. Efforts on an international scale are being made to protect endangered species — although, sad to say, without the co-operation of all nations.

The recently elected Australian Labor government has announced its decision to take any steps necessary to protect endangered species. It is preparing to ban the export of all kangaroo products, has already forbidden the importation of crocodiles and any products made from their skin, and recently decided to prohibit the importing of whale meat and all whale products, in accordance with the recommendation of the United Nations Conference on the Environment last May.

Leopard cubs . . . skins still imported

But the Australians plan to go even further. Realizing that animals as species belong to all mankind and not to one or more nations, the Canberra government will protect not only its own indigenous threatened animals but will forbid Australians from exploiting, importing or trading in endangered species from any part of the world.

It is an example which might well be followed by Canada. Ottawa has already imposed full or partial controls on endangered species such as whales, harp seals and Atlantic salmon. But, by permitting trading in threatened species from other countries it remains privy to the wanton destruction of many of man's fellow creatures. It is still possible — especially at this time of year — to read advertisements for tiger-skin, leopard-skin or ocelot coats. Meat or oil products from other scarce animals can be purchased in our stores.

Nations such as Russia, Japan, Norway and Denmark have shown themselves insensitive to moral arguments for conservation, and Canada's joining Australia and the U.S. states of Illinois and South Carolina in forbidding any truck with endangered species is unlikely to sway those four nations through example. But others might well join in the crusade and, in time, pressure could become too great to ignore.

So What's to Cheer Over?

By MIKE ROYKO
Chicago Daily News

Mike, the newsstand man, was alone in Chicago's downtown area, shivering in the cold night.

"Nah, nobody's been around celebrating," he said. "What's to celebrate?"

The end of the war. President Nixon said it on TV, a half-hour ago.

He shrugged. "That so? Now maybe we can take care of things in this country, huh?"

A young couple came around the corner, heads down in the wind. They disappeared down the subway ramp and the corner was again empty.

It wasn't like 1945, when the end of a war brought a million people downtown to cheer.

Now the president comes on TV, reads his speech, and without a sound the country sets the clock and goes to bed.

And that's as it should be. There is nothing to cheer about this time, except that it is over. Even the announcement could have been put more simply. His efforts to inject glory into our involvement were hollow. All he had to say was that it is finally over.

"Peace with honor." He had to use the wilted phrase that has been with us most of the war. He said we obtained it.

It is hard to see the honor.

We have just finished 10 years of pounding a little country that most of us hadn't heard of until we went there.

We threw everything, short of the Bomb, at them. At one point, we put more than half a million troops into it.

We killed them up close on the ground, and from high in the air. We used old-fashioned infantry tactics and modern electronic warfare. We scorched their forests and bombed their cities. Nobody will ever know how many of them we killed.

With all that, we got a draw before it ended; the word "frag" was introduced into our vocabulary. That's when enlisted men murder their officers. Drug addiction replaced VD as the GIs' ailment. Before it ended, we had put our own men on trial for murdering civilians, pilots were refusing to drop any more bombs.

After all that, why even talk about honor.

"Let us be proud," he said, "of those who sacrificed, who gave their lives that the people of Vietnam might live in freedom."

More hollow words. Almost 20 years ago, another war ended in a draw and we were told that our boys had died for somebody's freedom. Now the South Koreans live under a dictatorship.

And so will the South Vietnamese. If it isn't communism, it will be some other form of iron rule. They will be told what they can say, write, read or think. They are almost there already. When they step out of line, they will be tossed in jail.

Why kid ourselves? They didn't die for anyone's freedom. They died because we made a mistake, and we can't justify it with slogans and phrases from other times.

It is a war that made the 1960s the most terrible decade in our history. It tore us internally. It left many with a lust for revolution, and others with a lust for repression. It saw young people crossing borders or going to prisons rather than fight..

If we insist on looking for something of value in this war, then maybe it is this:

Maybe we finally have the painful knowledge that we can never again believe everything our leaders tell us. For years they told us one thing while they did another. They said we were winning while we were losing. They said we were getting out, while we were going in. They said the end was near, when it was far.

Maybe the next time somebody says that our young men must fight and die somewhere, we will not take their word that it is for a worthy cause. Maybe we will ask them to spell it out for us, nice and slow, and nice and clear.

And maybe the people in power will have learned that the people of this country are no longer willing to go marching off without having their questions answered first.

I hope we have learned these things, because there is nothing else to show for our longest war. If we haven't learned, then we are as empty and as cold as the downtown newsstand.

Exams Cloud Students' Forced Leisure

High school students in Victoria are moving their pinkies a little closer to the panic button today as visions loom of final government exams in June.

Since the strike by school board maintenance workers began 20 days ago, high school students have attended classes only to pick up homework assignments and only for about two hours a day.

"Most students are about two weeks behind in courses," Ron Warder, president of the Inter-High School Council, said Wednsday. "So we want to see at least one or two schools opened at least for Grade 12 students."

Many Grade 12 students have to write government exams at the end of the year either to graduage or to qualify for university entrance scholarships.

Warder said the exam timetable, which includes exams for other grades as well, is set far in advance.

"Even if they work through the Easter holidays," he said, "most students will still be behind at the end of the year."

A meeting of the council has been called for tonight and Warder says it plans to draft a policy statement on behalf of students.

"We're taking no stand on the strike itself," he said.

"We're asking if some exceptions can be made and a couple of schools can be manned, at least for the Grade 12 students."

Schools not on the semester system; Vic High, Esquimalt and Reynolds, are suffering the most, Warder said.

The other three senior secondary schools were in between semesters last week and haven't missed as much.

Warder said the council, made up of representatives from all the high schools, will send letters to the school board, the union, local 382, Canadian Union of Public Employees, and possibly the department of education.

Larger UVic SUB Studied

A project planning committee is expected to be established Friday, Feb. 9, to study a proposed $550,000 expansion of the University of Victoria's Student Union Building.

The proposed expansion would overhaul the upper floor of the SUB and add 14,500 more square feet of space.

A 300-seat auditorium-theatre; expanded facilities for clubs, offices, and the student newspaper, the Martlet; and more space for seminars, meetings and parties are proposed.

Preliminary studies of the expansion were done by Robert McDougall, chairman of the SUB management board, and David Titterton, general manager of the Alma Mater Society.

McDougall said the expansion has been talked about for five years, but he's hopeful this year it will really happen.

If the idea wins the approval of both the university and the Alma Mater Society, calling of tenders and construction could begin before the end of next summer, said McDougall.

McDougall and Titterton have suggested that the students pay for the expansion through their Dr. Ewing Memorial Fund, and the university pay for landscaping, access, parking and utility connections.

As there is $300,000 in the Ewing Fund for SUB expansion, the project would tie up the funds of the Alma Mater Society for only six or seven years, they said. Each student pays an annual fee of $32 to the Alma Mater Society, $10 of which goes into the Ewing Fund.

Renegotiate Columbia—McGeer

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Liberal MLA Pat McGeer (Vancouver-Point Grey) Wednesday urged the provincial government to renegotiate immediately the Columbia River Treaty with the United Staes and embark on an entirely new economic program of industrial expansion.

McGeer told the legislature B.C. has been bilked out of more than $360 million as a result of the treaty. And he said there is more than money at stake.

Not only has B.C. land been irrevocably damaged by the effects of the dams built as part of the Columbia project, but the U.S. has ended up with the lion's share of critical peaking power as well, he said.

The B.C. government must seek a renegotiation of the treaty, he said, and it must seek from the U.S. compensation for ecological damage caused and for peaking power lost.

McGeer said B.C.'s ace in the hole should be refusal to discuss any aspect of continental energy with the U.S. until the treaty is renegotiated.

"It will be a test of whether good will on the part of the United States extends to correcting an arrangement which is patently unfair to Canada," he said. "Never again should we sign any long-term energy contracts which do not provide adequate escape clauses."

McGeer said it is not only B.C. but the whole country which has lost out as a result of former premier W. A. C. Bennett's "extraordinarily foolish negotiating move."

"It won him an election, (in 1963) but it left us with an unparalleled mess on our doorsteps."

The bad effects of the whole Columbia agreement have extended to B.C. exports as well, McGeer said.

B.C. producers of aluminum, who already face stiff tariff barriers for exports into the United States, found that enterprisers in Washington and Oregon were able to take advantage of the cheap power provided by the American half of the Columbia agreement to produce aluminum at a lower cost than they could.

As a result, exports dropped and profits declined in those markets in which B.C. maintained a foothold, he said.

And this is felt not only in loss of tax revenue to the federal and provincial governments but also as increases on the province's unemployment rolls.

McGeer also told the house that it would be possible for the province to develop more than 1,000,000 new jobs in the next 15 years by producing sophisticated consumer goods and selling them to consumers around the world.

The Liberal MLA gave the example of the Phillips Corporation which is based in The Netherlands. He said Phillips had built itself up from almost nothing after the Second Wrold War to the point where it now employs more than 300,000 people, and another 1.5 million in connected service industries.

Examples like the Phillips story can be found all over the world, he said. Canada is sadly lacking in ability to develop new processesses of technology. Although the gross national product has been climbing at a steady rate, that rate is not nearly as high as the rate for resource-oriented industries. That situation can not exist for long, however, he warned.

LIDEN
. . . freeze backed

Social Credit MLA Bob McClelland (Langley) criticized the government's freeze on development of farmland, saying the solution lies not in imposing freezes but in improving services to farmers so that farms can be more economic propositions.

The government can't keep a viable agricultural industry going by force, he told the house, and if the government believes this, it is "completely out of touch with the real reasons why a farmer chooses to till the soil."

One way of helping the farmer, he said, would be by improving the drainage system in many areas. Involuntary flooding of farmland only shortens the growing season for the farmer and raises the prices of home-grown products for the domestic consumer.

He called the government freeze the first step in a campaign for total control of all privately-owned land in the province.

Another speaker in the throne speech debate, Harold Steves (NDP — Richmond), countered McClelland's criticisms of the farmland freeze by calling it "the best thing this government has done to date."

As a former farmer himself, forced out of business by "a combination of bad agricultural legislation by the previous government and unjust municipal zoning bylaws," Steves said his only regret was that the halt had not been called earlier.

He said before 1956 his riding had 24,000 acres of the most fertile agricultural land in Canada. In that year, at one meeting of Richmond council, and at the "urging of certain land speculators," half of that land was rezoned for residential and industrial use — including his own family's farm.

The result was haphazard urban growth and "monumental" costs in servicing the scattered developments with roads and drainage, Steves said.

Freshman MLA Carl Linden (NDP — Delta) also backed the government's position on the farmland freeze. Linden said the farmers of his area are pleased with the government's action.

In a wide-ranging maiden speech, Linden also:

—urged the government to sponser a portable pension plan;

—pushed for a provincial department of fisheries;

—said the government should not allow the Burlington Northern Railway to extend its line through his riding along prime recreational land;

—sought an improved public transportation system for his riding.

NO ABORTION CLINICS YET

There are no plans for establishment of abortion clinics in B.C., Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Wednesday.

He said general hospitals in the province are already doing an adequate job in dealing with the demand for abortions and he does not favor the concept of abortion clinics.

Cocke said he does not expect that the demand for abortions will increase very much in the future unless the population increases dramatically. Hospitals are able to cope with abortions now, he said, so there is no need for additional facilities.

Cocke said abortion clinics are not a good idea because it means "we shoulder people with that job and that job alone. We don't want to do that."

He gave the example of a nurse who found that her only duties involved assisting at abortions. Such continued activity would be a severe emotional strain on an individual, he said.

Asked his opinion of abortion, Cocke said he favors family planning. As a result, his department has brought some aspects of birth control under the provincial medicare scheme, he said.

"We want to do more on the preventive end of it."

Expansion Projects At Island Hospitals

Health Minister Dennis Cocke Wednesday announced contracts to two Victoria construction companies for hospital building projects up-Island.

One is expansion and renovation of the Campbell River and District General Hospital at a cost of $1,956,302. The contract goes to Farmer Construction Ltd. of Victoria.

The Campbell River project is subject to the concurrence of the Comox-Strathcona Regional Hospital District. It involves construction of an addition as well as alterations to increase the present 76 acute care beds by 30 for a total of 100 beds. Diagnostic and service departments will also be expanded and improved.

The other project is at St. Joseph's General Hospital at Comox and is to be awarded to E. J. Hunter and Sons Ltd. of Victoria. The contract amount is $1,097,242.

The project involves construction of a new wing to provide 20 psychiatric beds, completion of a top floor with 51 beds, including a five-bed intensive care unit, and dietary department expansion and renovations.

Press Conferences Draw Grit Fire

Liberal leader David Anderson Wednesday rebuked Premier Dave Barrett for making major policy statements at press conferences, instead of doing so on the floor of the legislature.

By ignoring the province's elected representatives in that way, he said, the premier's action is "an infringement of our privileges as members and in contempt of this legislature."

Rising on a point of order at the start of the afternoon's business, Anderson said as recently as last Friday a precedent was established whereby the house, "by consent," heard short policy statements from members of the executive council on "matters of public interest."

He was referring to statements by Barrett and Resources Minister Bob Williams dealing with measures taken to clean up the Alert Bay oil spill.

But since then, Anderson said, the premier made policy statements at two press conferences — one on the subject of a new coal port to be developed at Britannia and the other to announce establishment of a price review board for petroleum products.

Speaker Gordon Dowding told Anderson that the procedures of the B.C. legislature, unlike those of some other jurisdictions, do not allow ministers to make statements, or permit question periods, and therefore it would have been "out of order" for the minister in this case to make any statement "unless he had the floor."

Dowding said he would reserve judgment on Anderson's complaint.

Bethlehem Steel

The U.S.'s second largest steel maker, Bethlehem Steel Corp., announced today its profits for the year 1972 dropped 3.3 per cent to $134.58 million.

The announcement came a day after top-ranked U.S. Steel reported only a slight boost in its 1972 profits.

Based on preliminary Bethlehem figures, 1972 profits worked out to $3.02 per common share, compared with $3.14 in 1971 when net income totalled $139.24 million. Revenue, however, was up from $2.99 billion in 1971 to a record $3.14 billion.

Interprovincial

Interprovincial Pipe Line Co. reports 1972 earnings of $40.1 million or $1.57 a share, up from $35.6 million or $1.40 a share in 1971.

The company says in a report to shareholders that deliveries of crude oil, refined products and natural gas liquids averaged 1.11 million barrels a day, up 14 per cent from the previous year.

Cost of Interprovincial's 1973 expansion program was given at $104 million, down $12 million from the original estimate. The reduction was possible largely because means were found to reduce the pipeline looping required in Minnesota without reducing capacity.

Conventures

Conventures Ltd., has sold 65,000 shares in Alberta Natural Gas Co. Ltd. (ANG) to two Canadian financial institutions, president Carl O. Nickle announced today.

Investors Group of Winnipeg has purchased 60,000 ANG shares for its retirement mutual fund and the S.C.N. Foundation of Calgary has bought 5,000 shares.

The sale realized $1,430,000 or $22 a share.

The company reports operating revenues for 1972 of $17,291,000 and net income of $1,977,000 or $1.66 per share. Current dividend is $1 a year, payable quarterly.

Monarch Life

Monarch Life Assurance Co. says sales of insurance and annuities in 1972 hit a record $251,339,000. Yearly premiums on the sales reached $4,147,000, an 89 per cent rise over 1971.

Sales of individual policies were $213,171,000, a 55 per cent rise over 1971, and sales of group policies climbed 85 per cent to $38,168,000.

The firm's total business in force passed the $1 billion mark in September, 1972, putting Monarch in a select group of North American companies. Monarch now sells its products only in Canada. Net income attributable to Monarch shareholders was $2.36 a share in 1972, compared with $2.58 in 1971, $2.37 in 1970 and $1.91 in 1969.

CIL

Consolidated sales for Canadian Industries Limited and its subsidiary companies for the year ended Dec. 31, 1972, amounted to $324,547,0000. Sales for 1972 represented an increase of $7,564,000 over the preceding year, excluding the sales of Millhaven Fibres Limited, a subsidary company which was sold in the fourth quarter of 1971.

Net income, before extraordinary items, was $10,532,000, or $1.06 a common share, an increase of 11 cents a share compared with 1971 net income, (which included earnings of Millhaven Fibres Limited) of $9,458,000 or 95 cents a share.

Montreal Trust Retirement Savings Plan.
Not only do you beat taxes, your investment can be guaranteed.

That's right. If you like, Montreal Trust will guarantee your investment plus a good rate of interest. (Just ask about our current rate.) We do this with the GUARANTEED OPTION of our Retirement Savings Plan. It's the one sure way we make sure your retirement savings don't fluctuate with the stock market.

If you want a high rate of long-term interest and good security of capital, there's the Income Option. The Equity Option is designed for long-term capital gains. And it's a good hedge against inflation.

We're flexible:
Whatever section you decide to place your investment with — we'll send you — every 60 days — a statement showing how much you have invested to date, plus, the current value of your plan.

There's no termination fee either. In fact, you can transfer your investment to one or a combination of options with our Retirement Savings Plan. You set your own objectives.

We don't charge sales commission. Administration fees and commissions on some plans just don't give you the investment performance others do — right away. Montreal Trust alone invests and administers your funds. All we charge is ¾ of 1% of the value of your plan annually. And it's deducted from the income of your investment.

A guaranteed way to beat taxes:
We can show you how to lower your tax bracket now. The money you save will build a retirement income the day you invest with us. Sure all Retirement Savings Plans are tax deductible. But, at Montreal Trust, we invest every dollar you invest in our R.S.P. Every cent goes toward building your retirement income — right away.

TAX TIPS

This information is supplied by the federal department of national revenue. If further details are required, contact the Victoria District Taxation Office between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. at 388-3551. For those living outside the Victoria exchange area, ask the long-distance operator for Zenith 0-4000 and the call will be placed without charge.

Q. I retired last year on a company pension, and also received the old age pension and some investment income. Since my pension is less than my exemptions, no tax is deducted from it, but when my other income is added in I will have tax to pay. Is there some way I can pay my taxes so I won't be faced with having to pay them all at once when I file my return?

A. If tax deductions are not being made on at least three-quarters of your income you are required to estimate the tax that will be payable for the year, and pay it in advance, by quarterly instalments, on the last day of March, June, September and December, unless your tax this year or in the preceding year was not more than $400. Your district taxation office will provide you with the forms and information on how to estimate and pay income tax in this way.

Q. My wife and I have a joint bank account. The payments into the bank account are made by me since my wife has no private income of her own. The T5 slips are made out in our joint names. Should I still report the interest income on my tax return, including it with my income?

A. Yes. All of the bank interest must be reported as your income since your wife's share of the money on deposit came from you.

Gordon Head Residents Show Strength

Opponents of commercial and multiple family zoning in north Gordon Head turned out in strength Wednesday night for the last of informal discussions with Saanich planners.

Most of the estimated 150 who filled the club room at Gordon Head Recreation Centre appeared to favor the continued development of their district as single-family residential and many were suspicious of planner's motives in seeking informal discussion with residents.

But Ald. Leslie Passmore, who attended the meeting, said later it is the intention to consult further with people living in Gordon Head before council deals with a draft plan designating the area as a special community plan subject to strict regulation.

He said any proposals or charts referred to thus far in discussions are tentative.

Passmore suspected the meeting had been somewhat organized beforehand, "But it may only have been coincidence that so many people favoring single-family residences arrived there at the same time."

In five earlier meetings, mostly held in the afternoon, Gordon Head residents had been more open-minded toward the idea of controlled zoning to permit a small commercial area and a variety of multiple family dwellings.

Mrs. L. F. Bawlf, 4410 Chartwell, said those at the Wednesday night meeting had been very critical. Speaking for herself, she felt examples of multiple family housing in the university area to date were inferior and had not been built in compatibility with their surroundings.

She found the planners to be "nice people to talk to once you got them off to one side . . ."

"People don't mind development as long as they have a chance to see what is proposed and have their views considered in a plan," Mrs. Bawlf said.

Residents questioned the large capacity of sewers for the area, arguing that planners must be sure there will be multiple zoning or there would not be such over-capacity in services.

Passmore said all sewer design incorporates extra capacity to allow for growth and that it would be unrealistic to instal these expensive services on any other basis.

He was sure no department of municipal affairs would grant a municipality the right to zone an area exclusively for single-family residences. That would be discriminatory and would fail to recognize all facets of community use including multiple family zoning and commercial services, Passmore said.

He asked for a show of hands of those who favored commercial use and of those who favored multiple family zoning in the district and a majority were opposed in each case.

Passmore said he did not think cluster housing would be undesirable, and this type of housing would afford accommodation to those who wanted a country setting without the cares of upkeep.

In answer to a question, muncipal planner Tom Loney said planners and the council would accept briefs from individuals.

There will be no more meetings until a draft plan is drawn up, he said. Passmore indicated a further meeting could be called when more formal proposals are assembled for the area.

Loney was pleased with the over-all response.

"The worst thing that could have happened was complete disinterest," he said. "We did get people out and had all sorts of opinions expressed."

LOGGERS BACK

PORT ALBERNI — Just over 700 loggers at the Franklin River and Sproat Lake divisions of MacMillan Bloedel returned to work today.

The men stayed off work Wednesday when pickets appeared at marshalling yards. The pickets were from a subcontractor, Yellow Creek Logging.

Company and International Woodworkers of America officials were meeting today. Cause of the picketing was understood to be seniority in preferential hiring.

STAMP SALES TOTAL $12,000

A total of $12,000 was made from the sale of 15,000 first issues of a new Canadian stamp sold at the philatelic centre and from wickets at the Victoria post office Wednesday.

A post office official said this did not include sale of the issue to stamp collectors at 46 sub stations and two postal stations in the Greater Victoria area.

"The figure will be much higher when returns are received from these stations," he said.

The blue stamp commemorates the 350th anniversary of the birth of Francois-Xavier de Laval, first bishop of Quebec.

He said sale of the stamp was below average.

"Sale volumes depend largely on the subject matter," he said. "A picturesque scene or a reproduction of a famous historic painting will attract more buyers."

Camosun Council Cut to 9 Members

Camosun College council has had its membership cut from 12 to nine representatives, in line with other colleges across the province.

Originally made up of the nine Greater Victoria school board trustees and three government appointees, the council will now have only five school board members and four government appointees.

"We're still the majority on the council," school board chairman Peter Bunn said, "and we're just as happy to have our numbers reduced."

At a board meeting Wednesday night five trustees were appointed to the council: Dr. Philip Ney, Lavinia Greenwood, Dr. Hal Knight, John Duffus and Walter Donald. The four other members are not yet known.

First meeting of first reduced council will be Monday when a new chairman will be elected.

A Flight Into Fancy Shot Down by Leafs

By The Canadian Press

For the first 20 minutes of his National Hockey League coaching career, Earl Ingarfield was a winner.

Then New York Islanders, who have won only twice on the road and six times overall in their initial NHL season, brought their new pilot back to reality by dropping a 5-3 decision to the Maple Leafs in Toronto Wednesday night.

Elsewhere in the league, New York Rangers spotted the lowly California Golden Seals a first-period goal before defeating them 3-1 and Pittsburgh Penguins moved up a notch in the West Division standings by downing Los Angeles Kings 4-1.

Ingarfield, who replaced Phil Goyette as the Islanders' coach Monday, had to move Ed Westfall, his No. 2 scorer, to a defence spot and bring up three other players from New Haven Nighthawks of the American League to replace injured regulars.

The patchwork lineup looked good in the early stages as former Leaf Brian Spencer twice beat Toronto netminder Gord McRae, making his NHL debut, and Billy Smith kicked out everything the Leafs threw at him at the other end.

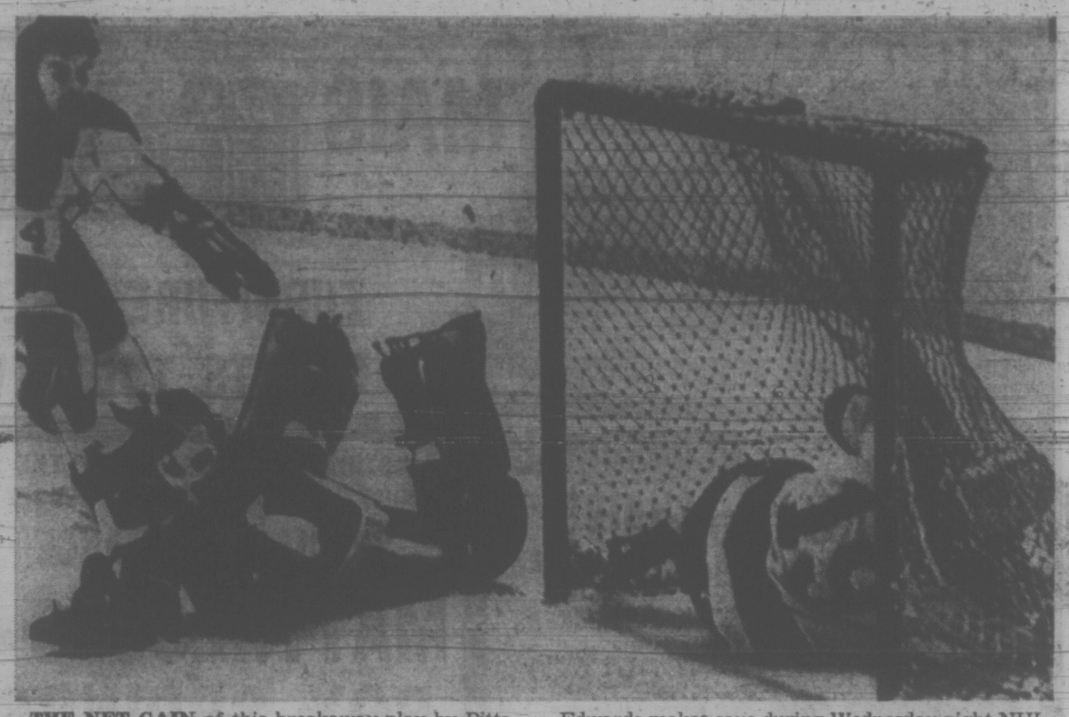
Garry Monahan finally put the puck past Smith 20 seconds before the first period ended and the Islanders' fortunes declined steadily as the Leafs scored five times in a row before rookie Billy Harris jammed the puck home through a maze of players for the third Islander goal in the closing seconds.

Paul Henderson had a productive evening for Toronto, setting up two goals by Monahan and one by Norm Ullman before scoring one himself.

The Rangers blasted 58 shots at California goaltender Gilles Meloche but the 22-year-old Montreal native stopped 20 of them in the first period as Walt McKechnie staked him to a 1-0 lead on one of only five shots the Seals got away against Gilles Villemure.

Brad Park, Bobby Rousseau and Steve Vickers scored the Ranger goals in the second period and Meloche closed the door again in the third, blocking 23 more New York drives.

The victory was the Rangers' fifth in a row, prolonging their undefeated streak to 11 games and moving them within three points of the Canadiens at the top of the East Division.



THE NET GAIN of this breakaway play by Pittsburgh Penguins' Jean Pronovost (19) is sudden stop in Los Angeles goal as Kings' goaltender Gary Edwards makes save during Wednesday night NHL game in Pittsburgh. Watching is Penguin centre Rick Kessell. (AP Wirephoto)

Baseball: The Change Could Be Delightful

Most baseball fans had to be intrigued by the recent announcement that henceforth the American League will go with 10 men, and the National League, nine.

Sorry about that Abner, but that's what your game has come to.

This latest oddity comes under the new statistical heading of DPH, whereby a designated pinch hitter (thus DPH), will bat for the pitcher in the American League, but the pitcher will continue to hit for himself in the National.

The National League rejected an opportunity to share in this first major innovation in major league baseball in years — where now the pitcher never hits, and the DPH never fields.

Even though it is generally conceded that most pitchers are lousy hitters, that isn't primarily the reason for change. It's simply that the AL has been upstaged by the NL in the past few years, and decided to do something about it. And the fact that the NL didn't go along with the idea is a break for the AL.

For instance, last year, the NL hitters knocked in 824 more runs than did the AL hitters. The NL also enjoyed a marked superiority in batting averages, .300 hitters, runs-batted-in, and on the whole, batted nine percentage points higher than the AL.

Besides the AL has lost nine of the last 10 all-star games, even if it has won three of the last five world series.

It's a Different Ball Game

It's simply that the AL needs help, a new look, and a shiny new image; and even if the age-old rules had to be bent to achieve it, the experiment may be useful. It could make for an entirely different ball game, and who really knows what to expect?

Take late in a game, for instance, a manager now won't have to take out his weak-hitting, but hard-throwing starting pitcher in favor of a pinch hitter if the score is close; a slow-footed outfielder who otherwise might be removed for defensive purposes now could be installed as a DPH and he wouldn't even have to play the outfield; and perhaps now a team will opt for a big inning when otherwise, with a pitcher at bat, a bunt might have been called for.

There are other possibilities, too. Suppose a team's best hitter is down with a sore arm, and might not otherwise play except in a pinch-hitting role. Now, he could be used as a DPH in the No. 4 spot in the batting order, and nothing would be lost from the attack.

Sure, some pitchers will become nameless as hitters, but one must wonder how the late Babe Ruth would have taken this new order.

Why Knock It? It May Work

The Babe was one of the finest pitchers of his day, before he became the finest home-run hitter of all time; and he got that way by being a hitting pitcher. First. But now, no more. For some a pity. For most, a blessing.

Already the figure filberts have been at work and using a technique called computer simulation, the DPH rule, it is said, would help the AL increase its production in the following ways:

The DPH (overall) will bat 84 points higher than a pitcher which means a nine-point surge per team in batting average;

The DPH will increase scoring by 70 runs a team, which means more than 800 runs for the league;

And if you've done your homework, and can recall the previous figures, a nine-point plus average, and 800 plus runs a year, were just the difference the two leagues ended up with last year.

Which is the AL way of achieving parity, or until the All-Star and World Series inter-league rivalries resume.

Then it's back to nine men against nine.

Still, the DPH experiment should be fascinating, and why knock something new, without first giving it a try?

Besides, it might even work. And right now, from an old Yankee fan, the AL needs all the DPHs it can get. So does baseball.

Meet Cancelled

VANCOUVER (CP) — Dr. Doug Clement, chairman of the Achilles Society, said Wednesday there will be no Achilles indoor track and field meet this year.

Clement said difficulties in finding a building for the meet at a convenient date delayed the proceedings to the point where the society felt it was too late in the year to hold the meet.

Cougar Sale Given Blessing of League

New owners of the Victoria Cougars are expected to be introduced tonight.

The team has called a press conference at 7:30 p.m. and it has been learned that Western Canada Junior Hockey League governors approved the transfer of owners at a meeting in Medicine Hat Tuesday.

Announcement of the sale as well as the governor's approval was delayed, however, in order to permit the Cougars to introduce their new owners in Victoria.

Control of the team falls into the hands of four Victoria residents, including general manager Eric Bishop. The remaining three can be identified only as "professional or businessmen."

Bishop also was a shareholder in Island Sporting Enterprises, Ltd., which formerly controlled the Cougars. Other shares were held by Mitch Pechet, the team's managing director, and Calgarians Jimmy Shields, Ed Owid, Bob Standen, Bud Milner and Jim Seymour.

Pechet also lives in Victoria but the former coach's position with the new regime is not known.

Cougars won two of three committee-room decisions at the governor's meeting in Medicine Hat.

Delegates upheld a decision by executive-secretary Tom Fisher that took two points from New Westminster Bruins and awarded them to Cougars because Bruins failed to wear protective helmets in a game Dec. 14.

The governors also agreed to revamp the present player draft within the league to help Cougars and Vancouver Nats. Nats have claimed they and the Cougars are being short-changed under the present system by which a club can protect 15 players. Nats want the number reduced to eight.

Cougars, Nats and New Westminster, along with Winnipeg Jets and Swift Current Broncos, were outvoted, 7-5, on a proposal by Bruin coach Ernie McLean that would have allowed all 12 teams into the playoffs.

The league also completed arrangements whereby Ed Chynoweth of Saskatoon will replace Fisher as executive-secretary and work full-time out of Saskatoon following the annual league meeting in June.

FREE RIDE MAY COST KIP AMATEUR STATUS

NAIROBI (AP) — The amateur status of Kip Keino was clouded Wednesday by reports in the Nairobi Daily Nation that the Olympic track star from Kenya accepted free air passage to the United States.

The newspaper quoted sources as saying Keino accepted an air ticket in Lagos, Nigeria, from a Ghanaian athlete currently studying in the U.S. The athlete was not named. Keino had been in Lagos competing in the All-Africa Games.

Keino is slated to run in the three-mile event in the Toronto Star Maple Leaf Indoor Games in Toronto Friday night.

He competed in Los Angeles Jan. 20 and in Albuquerque, N.M., last weekend.

The newspaper said Keino received an offer from a U.S. group to turn professional for an initial fee of $4,800, but Keino has not said whether he would accept it.

If he were declared professional on the technicality of accepting the airline ticket, he would be banned from amateur athletics anywhere in the world.

The Same Ski Thing

SCHRUNS - TSCHAGGUNS (AP) — Austria's Annemarie Proell, 19, opened the final leg of the World Cup ski competition today by doing exactly the same thing she has been doing before — winning.

She won the downhill on the Kapell track at this Austrian winter resort, her seventh downhill triumph this season and her 25th in her career.

Miss Proell negotiated the 2, 140-metre trail with a drop of 560 metres and 22 control gates in heavy fog in 1:36.19. The first five finishers were Austrians. The best outsider was France's Jacqueline Rouvier who was sixth.

The downhill opened the third and final phase of World Cup competition. There are 11 races which takes the skiers through Europe, Canada, the United States and Japan.

By winning, Miss Proell expanded her leading World Cup total to 225 points.

"I can not explain how I win so many races," Miss Proell said after the race," I only know that I like to win, and I hope to finish this season with the maximum point total", which would be 350.

Lauri Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., finished 20th with a time of 1:42.35, more than six seconds behind Miss Proell.

WEEKEND SKI REPORT

At least one of the two ski areas on Vancouver Island promises to have "good" conditions at the weekend.

Forbidden Plateau reported a temperature of 32 degrees this morning and it was snowing. Four inches of new snow have fallen atop an average base of 82 inches. Chains are mandatory for access to the area except for four-wheel-drive vehicles with good winter ties on all-four wheels.

No report was received from Green Mountain, but conditions can be expected to be similar.

Lower Mainland reports:

GROUSE MOUNTAIN: Overcast, 28 degrees, trace new snow, no total reported.

HEMLOCK VALLEY: Clear, 26 degrees, two inches new snow, no total reported.

MT. SEYMOUR: Overcast, 28 degrees, no new snow, no total reported.

MT. BAKER: 27 degrees, 16 inches new snow, 138-inch total.

IRISH SWEEPS WILL STAGE FOUR RACES

LONDON (CP) — The Irish Hospitals Sweepstakes will run four races this year, each carrying a superprize of $470,000. The first, the Irish Sweeps Lincoln, will be run at Doncaster, Yorkshire, March 27. The draw for this race will be March 22.

The Irish sweeps Derby will be run June 30 at The Curragh, Dublin, and the draw held three days earlier.

The third race, the Irish sweeps Cambridgeshire run at Newmarket, Suffolk, is scheduled for Oct. 6 with a draw Oct. 4.

The Irish sweeps hurdle, the final race, will be held in Dublin Dec. 27 with a draw a week earlier.

Chaney, White Thaw Out Celts

By The Associated Press

"We were so cold I was waiting for the Eskimos to show up," said Boston coach Tom Heinsohn.

Then along came the rescue team of Don Chaney and Jo Jo White to thaw out the Celtics and give them some breathing room in their tight race with New York Knicks.

"We played as bad as you could play," said Heinsohn after the Celtics played well enough to beat Cleveland Cavaliers 94-89 and take a one-game lead in the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division over the Knicks, who were upset 94-91 in Detroit.

In other NBA action, Golden State Warriors whipped Philadelphia '76ers 131-115 and Seattle SuperSonics topped Houston Rockets 118-109.

Chaney scored 14 points, nine of them on three-point plays, and White scored seven and turned in a top defensive effort in the final period to pull the Celtics past Cleveland. Chaney finished with a season-high 26 points.

Flyers Trample Visiting Kings

CHEMAINUS — Fuller Lake Flyers vaulted over Victoria Nixons Trucking and into second place by defeating Racquet Club Kings 8-1 Wednesday in a South Island Junior "B" Hockey League game at Fuller Lake Arena.

Steve Mankelow and Paul Livingston fired two goals each to lead Flyers while Dee Clakson, Bert Steen, Ray Stubbington and Peter Rogerson added single goals.

Brian Marvenko scored on a power play during the second period as Kings held Flyers to a scoreless tie in the first period and trailed by only 2-1 starting the third frame.

Easy or Hard, It's Still a Win

By The Canadian Press

It could scarcely have been easier for New Westminster Bruins — or harder for Flin Flon Bombers.

Both clubs registered victories Wednesday night in the Western Canada Hockey League but in one case the win was entirely predictable and came with ease and in the other a third-period rally was needed to break a 3-3 tie.

The Bruins moved up to share second place with their 9-2 rout of last-place Vancouver Nats in the league's Western Division.

The Bombers, in second place in the Eastern Division, moved to within eight points of Saskatoon Blades with their 5-3 win over Edmonton Oil Kings.

The Bruins, now tied with Edmonton for second with 57 points, one behind Medicine Hat Tigers, had such an easy time they only played their regular goalie for one period.

Spare goalie Ian MacWilliams, who has seen little action, went the rest of the way.

Flin Flon, starting a prolonged road trip in which the club plays nine games in 11 days, needed a third-period goal from Ron Andruff to break the tie. He put the game away at 19:13 with a shot into an empty net seconds before crashing into the side boards.

COUNCIL APPROVES MINNEAPOLIS STADIUM

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minneapolis city council voted Wednesday to approve construction of a downtown domed stadium, and supporters of the project appeared to have enough strength to override the expected veto of Mayor Charles Stenvig.

The vote was 10-to-3 in favor of building the 71,000-seat, $53 million stadium and parking ramp as a home for Minnesota Vikings of the National Football League.

Stenvig had warned Tuesday that he would veto the project because of public opposition. But, the council needs only a two-thirds vote — nine — to override the veto.

Colt GM Raps Owner For Talking Too Much

BALTIMORE (AP) — General manager Joe Thomas of Baltimore Colts admitted Wednesday he tried to trade defensive end Bubba Smith for Houston's No. 1 draft pick, but criticized Oilers' Owner Bud Adams for revealing the offer.

"That's very bad ethics," Thomas said of the published comments by Adams. "It disturbs me, because something like that can have a bad effect on a football team.

"If every club started revealing who was discussed in trades, there wouldn't be enough room in the papers to name all the players."

Adams said he was offered Smith, a former all-pro who sat out the season following knee surgery, and Baltimore's first-round draft pick for next year in exchange for Houston's No. 1 choice in the current draft that began Tuesday.

Houston kept the spot, using it to draft 275-pound defensive lineman John Matuszak of Tampa. The Colts had promised Matuszak they would take him at the first chance.

"Yes, I offered Bubba," Thomas said. "I'll trade anybody on our football club if I get the right price. I've told Bubba that, too."

Smith announced a few days ago that he would sell his Baltimore home and move to Los Angeles, saying he wanted to play for the Rams and former Colts' owner Carroll Rosenbloom.

Smith said he couldn't get along with Thomas, a former Toronto Argonaut assistant coach, who became the Baltimore general manager last July.

Rebuffed by Houston, Thomas eventually dealt defensive tackle Billy Newsome and a fourth-round choice to New Orleans for the Saints' top pick — which followed Houston in the first round.

After Houston selected Matuszak, the Colts drafted quarterback Bert Jones of Louisiana State.

Belmont Braves created a five-way traffic jam in first place of the Victoria Senior High School Boys' Basketball League by recording a 62-48 victory over visiting Esquimalt Dockers Wednesday night.

Dockers led 17-11 after the first quarter but Braves rallied to tie it up at 30-30 at half-time. Belmont coach Tom Hatcher told his charges to concentrate on checking in the third quarter and Braves took a 48-38 lead into the final frame.

Malcolm Moscrop topped Braves with 16 points while Phil Simms counted 24 points for Dockers.

Belmont Tomahawks regained a four-point lead in the Senior High School Girls' League by defeating previously-unbeaten Esquimalt Dockettes 36-29 in another game at Belmont.

Dockettes led 8-6 after the first quarter but Tomahawks scrambled back to gain a 12-12 tie at the intermission and then outscored the Visitors 13-6 in the third quarter.

Denise Montgomery and Wendy Hunter fired nine and eight points, respectively, to lead Belmont. Debbie Knowles paced Esquimalt with 14 points.

Elk Hunting by Permit Considered for Island

Many items fill the creel this week!

Permit hunting for Vancouver Island Elk and Rocky Mountain sheep will soon be a reality for B.C. sportsmen according to Glen Smith, Chief of game management for the fish and wildlife branch.

Smith told me last week that the branch has a committee designing a method by which the permit system could be adopted. He stated that one area in the province would have a trial system in effect this fall. The three areas being considered by the branch are: sheep in the Ashnola and Chilcotin Junction areas and elk on Vancouver Island.

The past policy of the branch has been to put a closure on those areas where the hunting demand has exceeded the supply for harvestable animals. This meant that hunting opportunity was eliminated for the small harvestable surplus. The permit system, according to Smith, would provide a better control of the harvest. At the same time it would provide quality hunting, a longer season and optimize major recreational values.

I agree strongly with Smith in his concern that an open permit draw would limit the hunters in the maximum interest group, particularly when there is a 30 per cent turnover of hunters every year. He said the committee will be conducting public hearings similar to one previously held with the B.C. Wildlife Federation.

The recent public hearing on the proposed Nanaimo Harbor development was the centre of concern by many environmental groups. Zeke Withler, chief of habitat protection for the fish and wildlife branch, summarized the basic problem for all by stating:

"In a broader look at the problem of development as estuarine areas, it becomes obvious that protection responsibilities are fragmented rather than co-ordinated. Locally, municipalities and regional districts may be involved as well as private developers, railroads, and port authorities. Provincially, the lands service highways, pollution control branch, municipal affairs and our department are involved. Federally, the dept. of transport, fisheries service, wildlife service and probably other agencies.

"In the face of current, steady encroachment on highly productive estuary areas, we often have no alternative but to protest unplanned developments which do not give adequate consideration to assessment of environmental impact.

"In this specific instance (Nanaimo harbor) we think it mandatory that expansion in the harbor should be part of a plan for development which adequately considers the sociological, economic, aesthetic and biological effects of development proposals."

The ominous overtones of the oil spill near Alert Bay which, according to David Anderson, Liberal leader and oil tanker opponent, is less than one half of one per cent of the tanker hazard, points out dramatically the preparation that must be made to halt or contain future spills. While speaking with Anderson, he reiterated his three point stand on the movement of oil along the B.C. coast:

"We must cut down on the amount of oil to be moved; if there is movement we must have the best possibly equipped ships; we must have the equipment for clean-up ready and immediately available."

A captain of a ship is first responsible for his crew and secondly for his ship. Having viewed the spill first hand, and beginning to realize the implications of the damage of the coastal ecology, I would suggest that a ship captain's second responsibility must be to the environment and third to his ship.

DEAF TACKLE DRAFTED

Sloan, deaf since birth, was drafted in the 10th round by St. Louis Cardinals.

"This is my lifelong ambition," the generally reserved Sloan said excitedly after learning he had been drafted. "I'm tickled to death."

Sloan, a 6-foot-5, 260-pounder from Nashville, reads lips, which enables him to get signals in the huddle.

Early in his college career, he would watch the arms of his opponent opposite him in order to learn when play would begin. When opposing teams picked this up and instructed Sloan's man to hesitate in coming off the ball, Sloan began watching the centre so he would know when to begin playing.

Canadian Among Draft Choices

NEW YORK (CP) — Two Toronto Argonauts, a British Columbia Lion, an offensive tackle from Windsor, Ont., and two of the fastest men in the world were among the 442 United States collegians picked in the two-day National Football League draft.

Don Smith, a 23-year-old graduate of Vincent Massey High School in Windsor who plays hockey as well as football for Purdue, was the seventh-round pick of Kansas City Chiefs.

The Chiefs will be bidding against Ottawa Rough Riders, who hold the Canadian Football League rights to the 6-5 251-pounder.

Rod Milburn, an Olympic gold medallist in the hurdles, and John Smith, one of the world's leading quartermilers, were claimed in the 13th round Wednesday by Los Angeles Rams and Dallas Cowboys respectively. Both were listed as wide receivers.

The two Argos, running back Leon McQuay and tackle Ron Mikolajczyk, both of whom left the University of Tampa as juniors, were picked in Tuesday's fifth round. New York Giants went after McQuay and Mikolajczyk was chosen by Oakland Raiders.

Argonaut hopes of landing another Tampan, defensive end John Matuszak, dimmed abruptly when Houston Oilers made him the No. 1 pick of the entire crop. His lawyer, Bob Woolf of Boston, predicted he would be the highest-paid lineman in football.

Monroe Eley, the running back from Arizona State who joined British Columbia Lions last season, was Kansas City's 11th-round choice.

Two rounds later, Los Angeles took Milburn and Dallas went for Smith.

QUICK RECOVERY from knee operation on Jan. 9 has Montreal's Joceleyne Bourassa planning practice session in Florida this weekend for return to women's pro golf circuit. Miss Bourassa won $16,000 as top rookie on tour last year, and was voted Canada's female athlete of the year.

Titans Trip Runners; Spartans Slap Hornets

Claremont Spartans did the predictable but Victoria Titans provided a surprise during opening matches Wednesday in the Victoria High School Rugby League.

The powerful defending-champion Spartans hammered host Mount View Hornets 31-3 while Titans, not considered to be a rugby power, handed visiting Reybolds Roadrunners an 18-11 loss.

Earl Sandwith led Spartans with two tries. Marth Ruthven, Darrol Schumaker, Mark Kendall and Mike Costello each added a try and Dave Chambers kicked two conversions as well as a field goal.

Ed Kadar supplied the Hornets' only points by booting a penalty goal.

Ron Songhurst kicked Titans to victory by connecting for two penalty goals and two conversions. Stan Hunt and Tony Flynn each scored a try for Titans.

Rod Malcolm and Barry Scroggs scored the Roadrunner tries and Dave Gordon booted a penalty goal.

PEETZ RENTS SKIS

Two years ago Ford Pinto started out as a strong alternative to the economy imports.

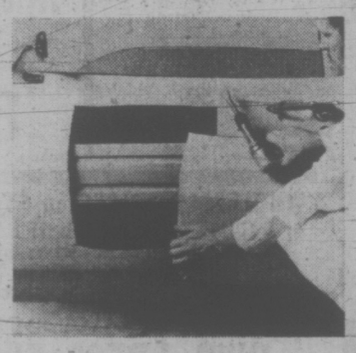
Today we believe it's an even stronger alternative.

In the last two years a lot of things have happened which have added to Pinto's basic value.

For example: we've made over 70 little improvements since Pinto was introduced. Among other things, we added strong steel guard rails to Pinto's side doors (illustrated at the right). We put in extra sound insulation to increase Pinto's quiet ride; we put extra padding in the seats to make Pinto even more comfortable; we also made some slight technical changes to improve the transmission and suspension components.

These improvements weren't made for show. They were made to simply make Pinto a better car for you.

Another of our actions was to take some optional features and put them together in a group that offered particular value. This group was and still is priced at only $100.00* and, on the 2-door sedan, includes front disc brakes, protective bodyside moldings, whitewalls, wheel covers, and an electric rear window defroster. For the Pinto Wagon this package priced at $100.00 includes tinted glass in place of the front disc brakes, which are standard on the wagon.



Of course, if you decide not to add this value option group, your Pinto will cost you that much less. The choice is up to you. You see, with Pinto, you don't have to pay for what you don't really want.

But a nice price, and a nice choice, are only part of the value Pinto offers you.

Pinto had certain product advantages going for it from the very beginning.

Pinto has always had rack-and-pinion steering. VW, Datsun and Toyota do not. The rack-and-pinion system is used by some of the world's great racing cars because it makes for precise, responsive steering. Pinto's rack-and-pinion steering system allows you to get into tight spots — and out of them — a little easier.

Another of Pinto's advantages is a wider stance than VW Super Beetle, Datsun 510 and Toyota Corolla. That means better stability on a windy day. And it's easier to pass that big truck.

Since Pinto was introduced as an economical 2-door sedan, we've added a handy 3-door Runabout, a Pinto Wagon, and a Pinto Wagon with an attractive Squire Option.

The various improvements we've added to Pinto's basic value in the last two years—from the extra sound insulation to the new choice of models—really all add up to the fact that we think we've made our Pinto an even stronger alternative to the imports. See if you agree. At your Ford Dealers.

WORRIES OVER FOR RASMINSKY

OTTAWA (CP) — After 12 worrisome years supervising Canada's international and domestic finances, Louis Rasminsky is going to enjoy the luxury of having no decisions to make.

As governor of the Bank of Canada, he faced a seemingly-uninterrupted series of problems involving international exchange rates, the domestic credit structure, interest rates and — most recently — the twin problems of inflation and unemployment.

Today, his 65th birthday, he retires from the bank.

In an interview Wednesday, Rasminsky said "I'm going to take six months off, in the course of which I will make no decisions about anything, including the course of my own future."

But retirement from the bank after 32 years there in various positions will not mean that the tall, slightly-stooped Montreal native will go out to pasture.

Possible activities include writing and public-service job with less onerous duties.

Reminiscing about his career as governor, he said not one of the 12 years was free of major worries. But he was heartened at the growing understanding among government figures and the public about the bank's problems.

"The job of being governor of a central bank and quite frequently having to take a view — if you're going to do your job properly — which in a sense is a longer-term view than most people in public life take, does mean you are quite often in a position where you are doing things that are not very popular because you are not thinking of tomorrow or the day after tomorrow but rather of two or three years from now."

Rasminsky said that no one could have done everything in exactly the right way for 12 years, but looking back he is confident that "the main thrust of our policies has been right."

Rasminsky was the third governor in the bank's 38-year history.

China Holds CIA Agent

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American held in a Chinese jail for more than 20 years was a CIA agent, President Nixon admitted publicly Wednesday.

Until now, the U.S. — while admitting that John Downey was engaged in espionage activities — had always maintained that he was a civilian employee of the U.S. Army whose plane had strayed off-course when it was shot down.

Nixon's statement, however, was not viewed here as an attempt to secure early freedom for Downey.

Pisces Policy Switched

VANCOUVER (CP)—The export ban on sale of a Pisces submersible to Russia has been raised by the Canadian government, the annual report of International Hydrodynamics Co. Ltd. of North Vancouver reveals.

R. B. Oldaker, president, states that the company has been notified by the government that an export permit will be granted if a new contract is executed.

A previous contract with "Sudo-Import," the Soviet agency, for purchase of the Pisces sciences, was nullified by the government under U.S. state department pressure.

Pisces IV was subsequently purchased by the Canadian Government for $2,029,000. Oldaker said the negotiations now are underway by his company to sell a similar craft, Pisces VI, to Russia. Results of the negotiations should be known soon.

The annual report shows a loss for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1972, of $171,396, or 20 cents a share, on gross sales of $1,577,997. Total loss for the year, after provisions for extra-ordinary items, was $427,948, or 49 cents a share.

Assets of the company are reported to be $1,826,342 and the shareholders' equity is stated at $985,519. Reported assets for the previous year were $2,835,155 with a shareholders' equity of $1,831,728.

Company shares, withdrawn from trading on the Vancouver Stock Exchange at the company's request pending reorganization and preparation of the annual report, were to resume trading today.

The report reveals that the original Pisces I, has been sold to Vickers Oceanics Ltd. of Great Britain as part of a $203,170 transaction. The submersible was shipped to England on Monday. It will be replaced by Pisces V, due for completion in April.

Double Day in Court For B.C. Fire Hero

VANCOUVER (CP) — Carl Agin received the Canadian Humane Society's bronze medal Wednesday for leading a six-year-old child to safety from a burning home in North Vancouver.

The award was delayed after Agin's April 22, 1970 deed, because he was on trail for non-capital murder.

Last November, the British Columbia Court of Appeals quashed the murder conviction.

Rick Seeley, who assisted Mr. Agin in the rescue, was awarded the society's certificate of merit.

Prior to the awards ceremony, Agin appeared in provincial court. He was remanded to March 19 on two counts of breaking and entering, then stayed around to accept his medal.

Duplication Questioned In Health Clinic System

Dr. Richard Foulkes, director of the province's Health Security Program Project, said Wednesday he is encouraged by the attitude to community health centres shown in a speech by the president-elect of the Canadian Medical Association.

Dr. Peter Banks of Victoria, who is also president-elect of the British Medical Association, gave his view on the health centre concept at a meeting Tuesday of the Women's Canadian Club.

Banks said such centres should be thoroughly tested before they are established on a wide scale and warned against duplication of existing services.

Foulkes said he was pleased that Banks "didn't speak against experimenting in health care centres" and agreed that there is a need to avoid duplication of health care facilities.

"This is especially important in Victoria where we have two general hospitals in need of extensive additions," Foulkes said. "For example, should both hospitals offer maternity care?"

Answering Bank's criticism that health centres are more expensive than the present system, Folkes said studies indicate that savings result when centres are integrated as part of a total health service.

He pointed out that such centres also permit more consumer participation in health care and the use of other health professionals.

"The centres give a better opportunity for quality control," Foulkes said. "At present the physician's performance is only audited in a hospital."

Banks told members of the Women's Canadian Club Tuesday that community health centres elsewhere have cost more money, not less.

He said costs at the Sault Ste. Marie Community Clinic in Ontario average $6 per capita compared to $5.05 for the province as a whole.

"When one considers the number of people to be employed within community clinics, salaries, pension plans, sabbatical leaves and fringe benefits that will have to be paid, it must be obvious whatever the advantages of community health clinics are, saving money won't be one of them," Banks said.

Banks said referral patterns of health clinics tend to be rigid and patients do not get the wide choice of specialty help available under the present system.

"Nevertheless, if the health centre concept can be proved to be a better system of delivering medical care to the people, we suggest it should be tried.

"What we are against is that it should be put in by government decree for all the people without being tried," he said.

He suggested one solution to rising costs would be regionalization of health care so that expensive facilities aren't duplicated.

"Should one spend money on facilities for treating alcoholics or young drug addicts, or should one spend it on more nursing homes for the increasing number of elderly people?" Banks asked.

"I suggest as strongly as I can, these choices should not be left to governments who will find them politicially impossible and will vacillate in the middle."

School Projects Given Approval

A small project at Dogwood Elementary School in the Sooke School District is among $695,000 worth of school construction projects authorized by the department of education.

The Dogwood project is addition of a gymnasium and auxiliary space at a cost of $35,000.

Imitation.

(they say it's the sincerest form of flattery)

The Original is Quasar Color TV, and we've been working on the idea since 1965.

We pioneered the all solid-state idea (when others were using tubes.) We pioneered the printed-circuit module (when others were wiring by hand.) And two years ago we introduced the first "One-button", 5-function, color tuner (when other sets still boasted four or five controls.)

We call it the Quasar System—and there's no mistaking it. Here's what to look for.

1. Solid-state "Mini-Circuits". The incredible thing about them is that they are constantly being improved, made simpler. And each new version fits previous sets.

These solid-state modules do most of the work in a Quasar Color TV. They snap-in, snap-out, can be replaced in minutes—and are inexpensive. And when you eventually replace one, it will be with the newest version of itself. (Instead of buying a whole new TV, you simply replace "Mini-Circuits".)

Motorola has pioneered this retro-fit concept. The combination of solid-state reliability with the anticipation of future technology is the heart of the Quasar System.

2. Insta-Matic Color Tuning. One button tunes all five picture controls: color hue, intensity, brightness, contrast and even the automatic fine tuning. So you don't have to be fiddling half the night. Again, Motorola has pioneered it. And it even has a sixth-sense to keep the colors beautiful when you change channels.

3. The Warranty. Fixed right to the back of your set with a phone number to call if you ever need help. No fine print. No passing the buck. Only Quasar Color TV has it.

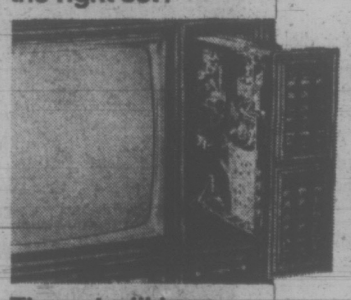
4. The Works in a Drawer. It pulls out, so a service technician can usually check out a problem right in your home.

When that happens your set doesn't have to go into the repair shop for a week or two. And you save a lot of money and a lot of aggravation. So don't be fooled. Insist on seeing Quasar Color TV.

What does the Quasar System all add up to? A set that will give you a beautiful picture, that you can depend on, for years to come.

Have a look at the Original.

How will you know you're buying the right set?



The set will have the Works in a Drawer. (It's the only one with the works in a Drawer).

BIRTHS CONTINUE DECLINE

B.C.'s birth rate continues its decline, the major cause of death are on the increase, and yet the province's population is still on the way up.

Those are the highlights of the annual report of the health branch released Wednesday by Health Minister Dennis Cocke.

The province's birth rate per 1,000 population declined in 1972 to 15.5 from the 1971 level of 16.0. The major causes of death — cancer and heart disease — took more lives than they did the previous year with cancer increasing from 150 deaths per 100,000 population to 151.

The death rate remained constant at 8.0 per 1,000 population, the same as the record low figure recorded in 1970.

The province's population increased 62,000 persons in 1972 with the total now standing at 2,247,000. This figure is about twice the registered population of 20 years ago.

Cocke's report said that although the central area of the province has shown notable growth during this time, the heaviest concentrations of population continue to be in the southwestern corner.

Nixon Dishes It Out

By JULES WITCOVER
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Richard Nixon, for weeks the target of charges that in political and foreign-policy success he was becoming more than ever the isolated president, came out on the firing line Wednesday and gave more than he took.

The president was tough and supremely self-confident in the first press conference of his second term.

The questions tossed at him dealt for the most part with the obvious subjects — Vietnam, amnesty, presidential powers and so on.

But he used them all as springboards for sharp lectures on political and public affairs and as outlets for some of his own grievances.

On those seeking amnesty for avoiding Vietnam war service, he was uncompromising:

"Certainly I have sympathy for any individual who has made a mistake. We have all made mistakes. But also, it is a rule of life, we all have to pay for our mistakes . . ."

Many Americans paid with their lives, or as prisoners of war, he said, or just by "serving in a country far away in a war that they realize had very little support among the so-called better people in the media and the intellectual circles, among some elements of the congress, particularly the Unites States senate, but which fortunately did have support among a majority of the American people . . ."

Amnesty, the president said stolidly, "means forgiveness. We cannot provide forgivness. Those who served paid their price. Those who deserted must pay their price, and the price is not a junket in the peace corps, or something like that, as some have suggested.

"The price is a criminal penalty for disobeying the laws of the United States. If they want to return to the United States, they must pay the penalty. If they don't want to return, they are certainly welcome to stay in any country that welcomes them."

His final lecture was a repetition of his admonition to Congress in his inaugural and budget messages — don't buy it if you can't pay for it.

"The problem here is basically that the congress wants responsibility, they want to share responsibility . . . but if you are going to have responsibility, you have to be more responsible and . . . this congress has not been responsible on money."

Congress represents "special interests," the president said, but he represents "the general interest," and that interest "whether it be rich or poor or old, is 'don't break the family budget by raising the taxes or raising prices,' and I am going to stand for that general interest."

The press conference had its light moments, as when the president advised 1976 Republican hopefuls to work for the party until the off-year elections and then strike out on their own, as he had done "with mixed results."

But by and large Nixon performed like a man with plenty to crow about, He may have vowed not to say "I told you so," but Wednesday he couldn't completely resist it.

Drug Squad Members Remanded on Charges

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three members of the RCMP drug squad charged with mischief and attempted arson were remanded to March 12 for trial when they appeared Wednesday in provincial court in White Rock.

Cpl. Gerald Walker and Constables Terrence Bryan and Brian Papp were charged following a raid late last year on a White Rock house occupied by members of a motorcycle club.

The charges were laid by White Rock prosecutor Norman Collingwood after he received the results of an RCMP investigation into a complaint by a brother of a member of the motorcycle club, the Gypsy Wheelers.

Protest Said Not Personal

KAMLOOPS (CP)—Gus Gottfriedson, chief of the Kamloops Indian band before the Dec. 21 election, said Wednesday the protest against election of Norman Larue was not a personal one.

In his first public statement since the election, Gottfriedson said the protest originated from a number of band members concerned that the future of the band could be determined by Indians who are not residents of the reserve, or even of the community.

Workers Have Say in Fund

VANCOUVER (CP)—Businessman Julian Smith believes the present method of corporate political contributions is unfair because employees have no voice in the decision. Wednesday, he announced a new approach.

Smith, president of Harry Smith and Sons Ltd. and chairman of Centura Industries and Resources Ltd., said that in the next federal election, $10 will be deposited with a trust company for each of his 125 employees.

"Arrangements will be made to enable each employee, communicating only with the trust company, to determine which candidate or party his or her $10 should be given."

Mr. Smith said the donation per employee will be $7 for provincial elections and $5 for municipal elections, under the same condition.

Ottawa 'Withholding Facts'

RICHMOND (CP) — A second attempt for adjournment of a public hearing into the expropriation of Sea Island properties for airport expansion was rejected Wednesday by hearing officer Isidore Wolfe.

Chuck Johnstone, lawyer for the Sea Island Ratepayers Association, moved the adjournment, saying the ministry of transport was contravening the Expropriation Act by withholding information on the proposed expansion of the Vancouver International Airport. He said the government had not supplied full information on a five-year plan for airport development and basic statistics on noise pollution.

Boys, 14, Sentenced for Murder

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Two 14-year-old boys, convicted of non-capital murder, were indefinitely committed to the care of the superintendent of child welfare Wednesday.

The two were earlier gound guilty in the shooting death of John McKinnon, 32, of Cache Creek, operator of a drive-in theatre.

Plucky Lad Bobs Back

He swam today despite recent major brain surgery

At three years old, Bruce has had trials and tribulations to last a lifetime and wearing his helmet in the pool at the Pearkes Clinic for handicapped children is not the biggest of them.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. David Ockenden of 1526 Cedar Glen Rd. in Saanich, Bruce is a hemophiliac. His blood is missing the clotting factor so any sort of injury is much more hazardous. Once when he accidentally bit his tongue, it bled for five days.

Late last fall Bruce fell off a low bed at home. At first he appeared unhurt but later complained of headaches. His doctor decided to transfer him to Vancouver General Hospital where he was given injections to control the bleeding inside his skull.

He fell into a coma and analysis revealed a large blood clot had developed on his brain.

That led to the first of two operations. In between, Bruce was home over Christmas with a piece of his skull, about four inches by three inches, missing and wearing "a sort of hockey helmet" for protection.

"We're very gratified at his recovery," said Dr. S. J. Peerless, a Vancouver neurosurgeon. "He was only hours away from death on arrival.

"We've done this operation before but it's unusual to have to do it with a hemophiliac. In the last two or three years there have been improvements in developing techniques to control hemophilia bleeding. However, it added complications to the operation."

In the first operation the blood clot was removed. But there was too much swelling to replace the piece of skull immediately so it was frozen and put back into place in the second operation last month.

Now Bruce visits Royal Jubilee Hospital regularly as an out-patient where he receives transfusions to supply him with what is called "factor eight," the clotting factor to help the healing process. Next month he should be fully recovered.

Mrs. Ockenden said today that a problem when Bruce was first taken to Vancouver was building the factor eight up quickly because the operation could not wait.

"We were told the chances were quite slim."

She recalls the relief from a phone call to the motel at 3 a.m. after the operation with the report Bruce was still going strong.

His recovery has been rapid and he is practically back to being his old self, she said.

While he sometimes becomes irritated about the number of people "poking" at him and the needles he has had to face, "he's really an exceptional little guy."

UVic Wants To See Color Of Gov't Cash

If the provincial government will grant the money, a law school at the University of Victoria could become a reality, Dr. D. J. MacLaurin, academic vice-president of the university, said today.

"Just as soon as the government gives us money we're in business," MacLaurin said.

He was commenting on a statement made Wednesday by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald that British Columbia needs a second law school, and it should be located in Victoria.

MacLaurin said the university senate approved creation of a law school in 1969 but budgetary problems have so far prevented its implementation.

He said a public statement by a cabinet minister favoring the law school doesn't necessarily mean he'll vote to provide money for the school.

The Victoria Bar Association has supported the idea of a law school at UVic, association vice-president R. B. Hutchison said.

A committee of bar association members has met with university officials several times to discuss the possibility of a law school, Hutchison said.

"The bar association was a little concerned that the impetus the university was looking for (on the school) was from the bar," he said.

"I got the definite feeling that there's nothing they'd (the university) like better than a law school if we just show up with our chequebooks."

Hutchison also said the bar association is probably not the best place for the university to go to gauge the public need for a second law school.

Bar Association 'Closed Shop'

The bar association is a "closed shop," and may understandably not be anxious to have competition from a lot of new law graduates, he said.

However, he said there's still room for "good bright law graduates" in the public service and in big companies, if not perhaps in private practise.

Macdonald said B.C. needs a second law school, and he thinks the new institution should be located in Victoria.

After making that bare statement Wednesday Macdonald said no more on the subject during his address in the throne speech debate at the legislature. But later he told reporters he is sure the members of the local bar will support him in "pushing the cause" for a second law school to be established here.

Macdonald said he has received no formal approach on the matter from the Victoria legal profession, but he knows many individuals are interested and enthusiastic.

Asked why he favors Victoria, he pointed out that UVic suggests itself as the "easiest centre" in B.C. for the facility. Meanwhile, Macdonald said, he foresees "some slight expansion" at the University of B.C. law school.

Telling the legislature about the need for more lawyers in the province, Macdonald said between 500 and 700 qualified young people come knocking at UBC's doors each year. All of them but the 200 with "superior marks" are turned away.

He deplored the fact that entry to the profession is so severely limited, adding: "For qualified young people the right to study law should be a democratic right."

Teen-Agers Admit Burglaries

Judge William Ostler said their offences "ends the theory that use of soft drugs doesn't lead to crime."

Richard Francis, 17, of 301-1414 Hillside; Brent McLellan, 18, of 2825 Grosvenor, and Leslie Stevens, 18, of 3110 Doncaster, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering two Oak Bay homes, on Kings Road and Hamiota Street Monday, looking for money.

At 7 p.m. the three broke into the home of Victor Young, 2110 Kings. Finding no money, they then broke into another house at 2455 Hamiota and stole $490 from a writing desk.

McLellan was found to have $104 on him when arrested by police. He said he had given his accomplices $20 each for their part in the robberies. The remainder had been spent on a trip to Vancouver to buy drugs.

At 11:30 p.m. Jan. 22, Francis, McLellan and 18-year-old David Allan Smith, of 1516 Earlston, broke into the business premises of Francis' father, a shoe repairer at 832 Fort.

Selective Picketing Hit

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Semester Switch Called Hard on Mount Doug

Charges of discrimination were levelled today against striking school board maintenance workers for picketing full-time only 13 of Victoria's 54 schools.

J. J. Lowther, principal of Mount Douglas senior secondary, said he does not mean to take sides in the 20-day-old strike.

"I just think it should be all or nothing," Lowther said.

The union has set up picket lines at 13 schools preventing inside workers in a sister CUPE local from going to work in those schools.

"It means the girls in some schools are getting salaries," Lowther said, "while others in the same union are not getting paid anything.

"Also the schools are being discriminated against because we aren't getting the service from our staffs."

Mount Doug is especially hit by the loss of staff because it is switching semesters this week which involves a great deal of paper work.

The striking union, local 382 of CUPE, says it doesn't have enough manpower to picket all schools and decided their best move would be to put full-time pickets on certain schools.

The 13 schools were chosen, union spokesman Dick Proctor said, because the strikers felt those ones were low on fuel.

"One of the reasons Mount Doug has been so closely picketed," he said, "is because construction has been going on there.

"We'd be in an indefensible position if we told the contruction trades they couldn't go to work and then let the inside workers into the school."

Technique Change Possible

Proctor said the decision was made by the union's strike committee and they would be re-evaluating the situation and perhaps make new plans if the strike continues.

The 13 schools now being picketed are: Mount Douglas, Victoria High, Cedar Hill junior secondary, Blanshard, George Jay, Fairburn, Frank Hobbs, Braefoot, Monterey, Richmond, Rockheights, Victoria West and Tillicum.

Meanwhile, parents were to formalize their protest over the strike in a peaceful demonstration in front of the Legislative Buildings at 2:30 p.m. today.

More than 100 concerned parents turned out to a meeting Wednesday night to approve a letter demanding government intervention into the strike. The letter, addressed to Labor Minister William King, Education Minister Eileen Dailly and Premier Barrett, will be presented to King at the demonstration.

At the meeting parents vocalized their complaints and agreed to remain neutral in the dispute, demanding only that their children be given back their right to an education.

School board chairman Peter Bunn said a closed meeting of the board, also held Wednesday night, was "an updating on the strike for other school trustees."

He said trustees were hopeful a settlement could be worked out over the weekend in renewed negotiating talks which begin Friday morning at 10 a.m. with mediator Clark Gilmour.

Bunn said if no agreement can be reached over the weekend, appeal for government action "might be a course of action, in consultation with the union."

"We would never do that unilaterally however," he added.

Recreation Going Up

There's a general price hike in the wind for city-owned recreational operations such as the McPherson Theatre and Crystal Pool.

Jack Morgan, recreation director for Victoria, said the newly-raised minimum wage rate and an upcoming new wage contract with public employees meant his office would have to "take a look at" its prices.

Entry charges at the pool, the theatre, Memorial Arena, Royal Athletic Park, playing fields and a food concession at Thetis Lake would be affected, Morgan said.

Rental for the theatre and the arena would also be boosted.

Morgan's comments came in discussion today by the city's finance committee of a claim by impresario Jerry Gosley, operator of the "Smile Show" for 32 years, that the show warranted cut-price community rates at McPherson Theatre.

Gosley said his show was going to become a non-profit outfit, an arrangement which would authorize a community rate at the publicly-owned theatre.

Morgan said a special rate was fixed for the show in 1972. Gosley listed his total rental as $12,000 "compared to around $3,000 the previous year at Oak Bay junior high school."

Gosley said an additional 5,500 attendance last year over the 1971 production covered the extra rental fee. He said no businessman would sponsor the show as a commercial proposition.

"Some performers were paid as little as $250 for 14 weeks work. We cannot now afford to employ the people we trained as they can find reasonably paid jobs with local theatrical companies who are being heavily subsidized by government and municipal grants," Gosley said in a brief.

Committee members expressed doubt about the non-profit theory since they felt, as Ald. Tom Christie put it, salaries could be adjusted upwards with profits. The committee turned the matter back to Morgan for a further report.

James Bay 'Ratepayers' Remain Out of Sight

James Bay residents found through a circular which hit their doormats Wednesday that they have a ratepayers' group — but 24 hours of phoning failed to get a reply at the group's alleged phone number.

The letter, purporting to be from James Bay Ratepayers' Association, PO Box 1901, Victoria, issued a high-pitched warning that land values could crash because of alleged plans by "the mayor" to zone James Bay back from apartments to duplexes for 15 to 20 years.

The letter says Mayor Peter Pollen intends to rezone the area "despite the high apartment zone taxes you have been paying for years."

Repeated phone calls to the association's published phone number, 384-5832, brought no reply.

The letter was unsigned by any name or other group, but called for a meeting 8 p.m. Monday at the Edelweiss Club, 108 Niagara.

Ald. Mike Young, asked to comment, said he thought the letter was "pitched in a form more hysterical than rational." But he added: "I'm not saying there's not equity problems in James Bay."

Young regretted the letter was unsigned. "It makes it very difficult to assess the situation when you're not aware of the principals. It leaves it open to speculation."

"Such an association has never been brought to my attention," he said. "I'm not saying there isn't one."

"If council had wished to capriciously rezone James Bay it could have last May, but it did not. We simply asked the planners to reassess James Bay because of the way development was shaping up. The letter's remarks on the James Bay transportation and land use study were completely erroneous."

The mayor has denied the letter's charges. He was not available for comment today. A spokesman for James Bay Community Association says the new ratepayers goup is the creation of a developers' lobby.

'Got to Get Money Somewhere'

By BRUCE OBEE
Times Staff

Colwood, Sidney and Saanich residents plagued by a recent rash of house break-ins, could be feeling the effects of the local drug culture, Colwood RCMP Sgt. G. R. Browne said today.

Since Dec. 21 there have been 25 break-ins in Colwood, 18 of which remain unsolved, said Browne.

"I think this (drugs) is the basic reason for it. The younger element are the ones that are deeply involved in the drug scene and some of them are on welfare or unemployed," he said.

The Colwood break-ins have occurred during darkened hours when people are "temporarily away." Most happen between 6:30 p.m. and midnight but some homes have been hit in the early morning, said Browne.

"There have been cases where people have only been away for two or three hours in the evening," he said.

The offender or offenders are looking specifically for cash. Jewelry, stereo equipment and other valuable items have been left behind.

"There's been the odd case of a portable radio or liquor stolen. All the places have been thoroughly ransacked," said Browne.

Entry is usually gained through an insecure door or window. In some instances a crowbar or screwdriver has been used.

"People have left lights on in the house and they've gone out and still come home and find they've been broken into. So it's obviously no deterrent," he said.

One woman was out for three hours. She left lights on in the house, the radio playing and a flood light on the front lawn. She arrived home and found boxes and drawers open and their contents "strewn all over the place." Fifteen dollars was missing, said Browne.

Saanich police Insp. C. R. Trueit said, "We've had about 30 for January already."

"We're finding that people are a little bit slow in getting around to informing us about what's going on," he said.

Anything suspicious or unusual should be reported to police.

"People should be suspicious of somebody who comes to the door looking for someone. They might just want to see if anyone is home," he said.

Sidney RCMP Sgt. Harry Chambers said, "We've had four in the last couple of weeks."

"It appears the same style" as in Saanich and Colwood. "They go into the house and ransack the bedrooms. They're just looking strictly for cash," he said.

TELEVISION CRITICS MEETING TONIGHT

A Vancouver Island branch of the Association for Public Broadcasting in B.C. is expected to develop from a meeting tonight at 8 in the Victoria Art Gallery.

Herschel Hardin, president of the B.C. association, will be one of the speakers. Some 80 Victorians have indicated support for the association's objectives, one of which is to make television an instrument for a brighter future in Canada instead of a merchandising aid.

An earlier Times notice of the meeting listed the meeting day as Friday.

Tears to Your Eyes In Green and Blue

In addition to the numerous failings which those near and dear to me delight in enumerating, I must admit to being completely unable to make decisions.

I have been known to go through the whole day with one blue eyelid and one green one, simply because I've been unable to decide between them.

Nowhere is this lack of conviction so obvious as it was last week when we went out to dinner with another couple. After much soul-searching, I came to a decision. "The veal scallopini sounds divine. No question about it; I'll have scallopini." I smugly folded my menu and began wrestling with my napkin, which was folded into a replica of the Houston Astrodome.

"I think I'll have scampi," my husband declared.

"Scampi," I mused aloud, temporarily abandoning my battle with the napkin, which was resolutely defying any attempt to unfold it. "That does sound good. I'll have scampi instead of the veal."

"Where?" I cried.

"It's not a good time of the year for lobster," my husband whispered to me.

"You mean they're all tough and stringy?" I asked.

"I mean they're all $13.50."

"What kind of potato would madame like? Mashed, baked, or French fried?"

"Mashed . . . no, baked," I stammered.

"With sour cream or bacon bits?"

"Yes," I bleated, sweat beading my upper lip.

"And would you like Roquefort, French or Thousand Island dressing on your salad?"

"Whatever you have the most of," I bawled wildly, my cheeks coursed by twin rivulets of tears. One green and one blue.

Sourdough: A Heritage Lives On

By ROBERT LINDSEY
New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO—Its taste is tart, the crust is hard, and it's difficult to eat without showering crumbs all over one's clothes.

But to most San Franciscans, the city's sourdough French bread is as popular as its cable cars — and judging from sales in bakeries in other cities recently, it is becoming as popular a San Francisco export as topless dancing, which also started here.

Hundreds of pounds of the freshly baked local bread—in long, dark-crusted, torpedo-shaped loaves, or fat brown loaves shaped like a discus—leave the city before dawn on most mornings in the cargo compartments of jet airliners or in freezer trucks.

And soon, the special flavor of the bread may be exported around the nation in test tubes, according to a team of government scientists who say they've discovered that a microscopic "bug" that has been transmitted through mounds of bread-batter for more than a century is responsible for its unusual taste.

"Our shipments out of the city have gone up at least 50 per cent in the last two years," said Clifford Catsoulis, an executive of Parisian Bakeries, the city's biggest producer of the bread, recently as the distinctive, fresh aroma of baking bread filled his office.

FANTASTIC

Costa Zmay, vice president of Larraburu Bakery, another major sourdourgh bread producer, said:

"It's been fantastic. We're shipping all over the country. It's now available in 15 different airports, and I don't think there's a major city in the country that doesn't have at least one store or restaurant where you get it."

The executives attribute the demand to expatriate San Franciscans who miss the sharp, crusty bread, but, more importantly, to visitors from other cities who discovered the bread here and want it at home.

LEGENDARY

The most enthusiastic lovers of San Francisco sourdough consider it the first bread in the world, outranking the chewy brioche of Paris, the pumpernickels, ryes and black breads of Eastern Europe and the bagels of New York.

Legend has long held that the bread could be made only in San Francisco.

"I could take you 400 miles south to Los Angeles," Zmay insisted, "and you'll see they can't make it; they can't duplicate the flavor. It's unique to San Francisco; I feel the fog has a lot to do with it. Or maybe it's our temperature, or something that's in the air."

However, a U.S. government microbiologist who has been trying for three years to discover the secret of the bread's flavor, attributes the distinctive flavor to "a bug"—a recently discovered species of bacteria that, literally, has been handed down from baker to baker here almost daily for more than 100 years.

And the researcher, Dr. Leo Kline of the U.S. department of agriculture regional laboratory, said he thinks it will be feasible soon to export the bacteria—which he calls "Lactobacillus San Francisco" — so that San Francisco's famous bread can be made any place.

BAKER'S HERITAGE

"It's impossible to say with certainty how and where it (the microrganism) originated," Kline said during a recent interview. But he said it apparently had been a generation-to-generation heritage of bakers here since the middle of last century, when French settlers or Basques from Spain brought their baking know-how—and possibly "the bug" as well—from Europe.

Gold miners in California, B.C., the Yukon and Alaska—some called "sourdoughs" because of their affinity for the bread — picked up the technique later.

It is essential to understand the history of a loaf of the bread in order to understand Kline's thesis.

Each day before bakers make more bread, they set aside a small portion of their dough. The next day, they take this dough — called a "starter" or "mother" — and mix it with flour, water and salt for their next baking session, so that it constitutes about 11 per cent of the total batter.

Then, before this batch of batter is baked, the bakers again remove a small portion as the next day's "starter." The process goes on and on. The "starter" contains an unusual strain of yeast that leavens the bread, and the "Bacillus San Francisco." Each day it is transplanted in sort of a chain of perpetual motion.

For their part, San Francisco's bakers are looking whimsically at the scientific efforts —while they count their profits—as more and more people from New York, Los Angeles, Boston, New Orleans, and elsewhere send in orders.

"I don't believe much in that stuff," Zmay, the bakery official said of the government research. "If you ask me, I think it's probably the fog."

Jaycees Plan 'People's Unit'

Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce members hope to divert women clamoring for admission to the all-male organization with the promise of a separate unit open to both men and women.

Victoria Jaycee president Gordon Boyd said Tuesday that he was sure a "people-type unit" would be formed within the next few months.

Boyd said that each chapter decides whether or not to admit women according to the wishes of members "and our unit wants to remain all male."

He says Victoria Jaycees aren't anti-women but want to stick to their 50-year-old tradition of "boys night out."

"Most members joined with the idea that this was an all-male organization, Boyd said. There should be a place where young men can meet for good fellowship without the company of women."

Boyd says members recognize the rising pressure to admit women and "feel it's better to provide an alternative rather than jeopardize our position."

He said that the membership issue would be decided at the annual meeting Feb. 7. At that time members are expected to approve a new Colwood chapter for both men and women.

Boyd agrees Victoria Jaycees lag behind other Canadian chapters. The Duncan was the first to admit women last year.

He thinks the Victoria chapter will probably have to admit women sooner or later.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My husband has many fine qualities, but he has one serious hangup. He absolutely refuses to let me go to a male doctor!

For some reason, he believes that male doctors are in the profession to get their kicks from viewing the anatomies of their female patients.

When I became pregnant, my husband insisted that I go to a woman doctor. There was only one, and she wasn't a specialist in obstetrics or gynecology. She was a general practionier. And she was in a town 75 miles from where we lived. I went to her, but co plications set after I went into labor, and she called in an obstetrician (a man) and when my husband got the news he nearly left me. The fact that this obstetrician saved my life and my baby's life didn't matter to my husband.

Don't tell me my husband needs to see a psychiatrist. He'd never go. He thinks they are all quacks.

What do I do if I need a specialist again?—Afraid to Get Sick

DEAR AFRAID: Get the best professional care available, and if it happens to be a man, and your husband leaves you because you had a male doctor, you haven't lost much.

DEAR ABBY: Now that women have demanded equal rights, particularly in the area of employment, I wonder how many females will apply for jobs as ditch diggers, plumbers, coal miners, garbage collectors and slaughterhouse butchers?

I am aware that not all women in the world are pushing for equality, but those who are have made so much noise about it that I can no longer give up my seat on a bus to a lady. And I will never stand back and let a lady go first, unless, of course, she wants to jump out of a window, or off a bridge. — Sincerely Yours, John In Oregon

DEAR JOHN: After you, sir!

DEAR ABBY: We had a family party and invited my daughter's widowed mother-in-law, Anna, and we told her to bring Henry (her boyfriend). Well, Henry was so rude and obnoxious, we were embarrassed before our friends.

Our problem is that our daughter is being married, and we want to invite Anna to the wedding, but we sure don't want her to bring Henry. Would it be proper to invite Anna and tell her not to bring Henry because he might spoil it for all the other guests?

How can this be done without hurting anyone's feelings? When I say Henry is obnoxious, I am not exaggerating. Even my husband, who doesn't get upset often, said Henry really got to him.

Can you help us? — Tough Decision

DEAR TOUGH: There is no way to tell a woman that her gentleman friend is "obnoxious" and therefore not welcome to accompany her without hurting her feelings. I say, invite Anna and let her bring Henry. I doubt that Henry would "spoil" the wedding for all the other guests.

CONFIDENTIAL TO S. J. S. AT STANFORD: The late W. Beran Wolfe, an American psychiatrist, put it this way: "Freud found sex an outcast in the outhouse, and left it in the living room, an honored guest."

Problems? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. For a personal reply write to ABBY, Box No. 69700, L.A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope.

At present there are over 100,000 undiagnosed diabetics in Canada. If their condition is detected early enough, it can be controlled without much difficulty. But if it is allowed to progress too far, serious trouble may result.

The 24-page Diabetes — a question and answer book for Canadians — explains that diabetes is a condition in which the body is unable to make proper use of certain foods.

Anyone may become diabetic, but the main sufferers are people with diabetic relatives and those over 40. Of every three diabetics two are women. It is also noteworthy that more than 80 per cent of adults were overweight before they developed diabetes.

Diabetes is caused by a lack of insulin in the body. To control this imbalance, doctors usually concern themselves with an adjustment of the diet, added insulin and exercise.

You probably know that insulin was discovered in 1922 by two Canadian physicians, Drs. Grant Banting and Charles Best. This hormone is so powerful that one teaspoonful in powder form will meet the need of a fairly severe diabetic for more than five years.

The booklet also discusses what the Canadian Diabetic Association can do for those afflicted.

Send your request to: Canadian Diabetic Association, 1491 Yonge Street, Toronto 7, Ontario. Please allow at least three to four weeks for delivery.

It's Not Nostalgia Says Design Winner

NEW YORK — Highlighting the first annual Melchers Award for Canadian Designer of the Year, more than 100 fashion editors from newspapers, radio and television recently gathered at the New York Hilton to preview the spring 1973 collections of Canada's leading designers.

Warden, a native of Niagara Falls, Ontario, who colors his line, he says, always to go with his flaming red hair, sums up his look: "Definitely on the off-whites. Off-white is the most elegant color in the whole world. It's not white — white becomes off-white when it's dirty.

"I believe strictly in elegance now. It's not Great Gatsby — I don't know anything about Great Gatsby. I'm not nostalgic at all. I don't like copying things — it's not me.

"I only know what I believe in — elegant clothes whether you're 18 or 55 — things that are comfortable and you can wear."

He means lots of rich mohair cardigan jackets or a sweeping, mid-calf super-luxury wrap coat over white flannel pants and white flannel pants and white shirt with lots of pearls . . . lots of easy shirts and separates and turbaned-heads.

Montreal's Par Morty mixed the basic geometrics in a series of red, white and blue wool suits — pinstripe jackets with checked skirts and polka dot shirts — sometimes with an amusing bow tie.

The LUV Originals collection designed by Elvia Gobbo catered to the moods of the active woman: beige gabardine co-ordinated jackets and pants, slubbed or seeded canvas for pants and shirtjackets or riding skirts and tops, soft, colorful grape-printed challis for shirtdresses with drawstring waists in pale blues and aqua.

Lilly Dee of Modes Bilboquet emphasized the clean-cut look in youth garments — no harsh prints or colors — merely crisp, basic black and white in dots and checks and stripes, the basic geometrics.

Manufacturers Must Prove Goods' Worth

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Special to The Times

Manufacturers of cosmetics and medical devices will soon have to prove their products are safe before they are put on the Canadian market.

A regulatory change in the Food and Drug Act, expected to be announced in a few weeks, promises to switch the federal government from the defensive to the offensive in another major areas of consumer interest.

Similar regulations are already in effect for drugs covered by the same act. And these powers have been used several times in the past few months, to force off the market a number of drugs suspected to be potentially harmful to Canadians.

UP TO GOV'T

At present, the health department must prove a cosmetic or a medical device is harmful before it can force a manufacturer to take it off the market.

Cosmetics, by the way, include lipsticks, eye make-up, face powders, some toothpastes and mouthwashes, soaps and other toiletries.

With the new regulations, Ottawa will be able to require a manufacturer of a cosmetic or medical device suspected of being harmful to provide the government with evidence the product is safe by a certain date or remove the product from the market.

And once such a product is removed from the market, the manufacturer would not be allowed to place it back on the market until it was proven safe to Ottawa's satisfaction.

The phenomenal growth in new formulations of cosmetics in recent years is perhaps the main reason for needing such new regulatory powers, according to one source.

In the old days to use a phrase, cosmetics were made mostly from "natural" products such as animal and plant fats and animal and plant dyes. Such products had been proven successful, indirectly through their long use.

CURRENT LEAKS

There has been some concern recently that some of the more exotic chemical now being used in some cosmetics could turn out to be harmful, for example.

In thecase of medical devices, the increased sophistication of electronic life-sign monitoring equipment, for example, has raised concerns about possible danger to patients from stray electrical current leaks.

Last year's hexachlorophene problem, which involved the death of a number of babies in France and resulted in a number of hexachlorophene-containing products being replaced on prescription, could have been tackled differently by Ottawa if the planned cosmetic regulations had been available, sources suggest.

In fact, the health department may use the new regulations to force a handful of cosmetic manufacturers who want to continue using the anti-bacterial chemical in their products to prove that such products would be safe before they can be marketed.

Warfarin As Cancer Deterrent

DUBLIN (Reuter) — The drug warfarin, best known as a rat poison, is proving remarkably effective in controlling the spread of cancer tumors, Irish researchers report.

The first controlled trial using the drug in cancer therapy more than doubled the survival rate after two years of treatment to patients suffering from a variety of recurrent tumors.

Patience Lacking

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Mabel Cunningham is setting a record. She has lasted two years as a group residence mother for the Children's Aid society here, when the average stay is less than a year. The difference between herself and people who have trouble coping with children is patience, she said.

POLISH LOVELORN FIND A SOLACE

WARSAW (AP) — The letters pouring into the office of women's weeklies have all sorts of questions:

"I love a young man, who went around with me for quite a few months. But after I gave myself to him, he started seeing me less and less. What should I do now to make him come back?"

"How should I dress for a civil marriage? Would a white wedding dress be suitable or should it be a normal elegant frock?"

"I am a devout Catholic and love a man who is an atheist. Should I marry him? He agrees to a church wedding and christening of children, but refuses to practice religion."

Dealing with problems like these, the women's weeklies claim the biggest circulation of all publications in Communist-ruled Poland.

MADE BIG PROFIT

Mrs. Barbara Sidorczuk, editor of the leading magazine Kobieta I Zycie (Woman and Life) says only the shortage of paper keeps her at 650,000 copies. The magazine netted $820,000 last year while many political newspapers required government subsidies. Kobieta I Zycie is addressed to more than four million working women. Housekeeping, child care, legal, marital and medical advice, labor problems, and housing occupy most of the space, leaving a few pages for fashions.

Fashions in Poland are based on the Paris line for adults and on London for young girls. Kobieta I Zycie also prints easy-to-make patterns.

Recently some Polish papers have begun a propaganda campaign for more births. One periodical went so far as to say that an "honest couple should have three children."

Woman and Life takes no part in this campaign. It was one of the main supporters of a free-abortions policy and still adheres to that line.

"Our opinion is that a woman should herself decide whether and how many children she wants," Mrs. Sidorczuk said.

Priority: Region Planning

Duncan Bureau, Phone 746-6181

DUNCAN — Over-all planning throughout the Cowichan Valley Regional District is one of the main priorities this year, says newly - elected chairman Ald. Margaret Robertson.

Problems do not stop at boundaries," she said. The chairman said she would like to see zoning and subdivision regulations throughout the district with the ecological balance disturbed as little as possible.

"Growth cannot be stopped but it should certainly be planned and controlled and for the benefit of all people in the area."

Robertson said "we must not allow the Cowichan Valley to become another Fraser Valley. We must have good land use. We must not have urban sprawl."

Besides the four organized areas in the regional district (North Cowichan, Duncan, Lake Cowichan and Ladysmith), which all have their own zoning and subdivision regulations, there are nine electoral areas.

In the district that runs from the Malahat to North Oyster to the west coast, Cowichan Bay is the only electoral area to have zoning regulations.

A recent attempt by the majority of Mill Bay residents to have subdivision regulations brought into their area was turned down by the board due to strong protests by a majority group.

Robertson said planning and zoning will be instituted as residents become ready for it.

Population of the regional district is around 35,000.

Mrs. Robertson said that over-all recreation is also high on her list of priorities for the regional board but she said that those who benefit from a park or facility should pay for it.

"Community parks should be paid for by the respective areas and where the whole region benefits everyone should pay," she said.

Although the board has been studying garbage disposal in the district, Robertson said garbage is still a big problem.

North Cowichan has had its own incinerator for the past two years while the Cowichan Lake area residents voted in favor of an incinerator in the December elections.

Incinerators for other areas are under consideration.

As vice-chairman of the regional hospital board, Mrs. Robertson said her main objective is to see the $1 million extended care hospital completed. Construction should be finished at the end of March.

"There obviously must be a study on intermediary care for patients," she said.

"This involves boarding and nursing homes for people who do not need extended care or acute care but do need nursing supervision," she explained.

SURVIVES PLUNGE

MILL BAY — A 41-year-old Mill Bay man is in satisfactory condition in the Cowichan Hospital after the car he was driving Wednesday afternoon crashed through a guardrail and travelled about 250 feet down an embankment.

RCMP said Patrick O'Rourke, Noowick Road, suffered multiple bruises, cuts and chest injuries.

GILL

Accountant Elected By Chamber

Gill, who has been an executive member of the chamber for the past three years, was vice-president last year.

Outgoing president Mullins urged chamber members to attend the chamber's annual installation banquet on Feb. 10 where former hockey player Babe Pratt will be guest speaker.

Pratt is now public relations man for the Vancouver Canucks.

At the same time Pratt will present special awards to the best athlete in the Cowichan Valley and to the person who has done the most in promoting sports among the youth of the valley.

Mullins said the chamber has received 20 to 30 nominations for the awards.

Cuba Returns Ransom, Guns

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Cuba returned the $320,000 ransom and an arsenal of weapons that landed in Havana last November along with nine guerrillas in a hijacked Mexicana airlines jet, Mexico said Wednesday. The arsenal included nine machine guns, seven submachine guns and two pistols, plus a good store of ammunition.

Opinions Clash Over Housing

MAPLE BAY — A citizen took sharp issue with a group of his fellow ratepayers Wednesday night for opposing a proposed 1,500 unit housing development on 525 acres on Mount Tzouhalem.

Reginald Bezzola launched his attack at a public meeting, one of a series to discuss the proposal.

A Maple Bay resident for the past 16 years, Bezzola bluntly told the gathering of more than 60 people: "I want to know why you are saying what you are."

He said he could get no information from a resident who called at his home seeking support for a petiton against the development and asking for money to pay for legal action.

He admitted that he had missed the first two public meetings because he was sick or working.

Bezzola said he then went to the municipality and to Bob Kennedy, project manager for the developers, to obtain information.

He then proceeded to read out the information, most of which had alrready been reported at former meetings.

Bezzola submitted a sketch of the project. Other members of the meeting said they had been unable to get one.

Residents in the Maple Bay area are attempting to have North Cowichan council's bylaw, to allow the project to be carried out under a land-use contract, quashed in the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

J. J. Gow, lawyer with Hallatt, Stewart and Gow, of Victoria, will represent the ratepayers during the court session to be held Monday. He will argue that information given at the public hearing was incomplete, the meeting was told.

Residents have said they are opposing the development because it will mean their taxes will go up; because the population will double, resulting in increased traffic; and because the area will be changed from the rural residential, which they would like to preserve.

"We are not against development. We know we can't stop it but we don't want it on such a large scale," a spokesman said.

Bezzola said he supports the development because it will be controlled under the land-use contract and will not be a "haphazard development. I feel the whole area will benefit."

Residents plan to submit a lengthy petition to North Cowichan's general meeting Wednesday afternoon asking that the council rescind the bylaw.

The strength of Wednesday's action will depend on the court's decision Monday, leader Deane Russell told the group.

Russell said his group was denied the right to have questions answered.

A public meeting planned for this purpose was cancelled by North Cowichan after council learned legal action was planned by residents.

Youth Injured At Controversial School Crossing

DUNCAN — A six-year-old Duncan youth received a broken leg Wednesday afternoon after he was struck by a car while crossing the Trans-Canada Highway from Koksilah School on his way home for lunch.

Darren George was taken to the Cowichan Hospital after he was struck by the vehicle driven by Arthur Kraik, of Nanaimo.

The accieent occurred within a week of the speed limit being reduced from 50 to 40 miles an hour and two days after the Cowichan school board rejected the reduction as a solution to unsafe crossing for school children.

School board officials have been working for an overpass to provide safe crossing. Another solution they have considered is a traffic light.

SING-ALONG GUITAR LESSONS

On April the 8th, 1942, I established my first travel bureau in the lobby of the Strathcona Hotel. I then published Victoria's first travel publication, and then moved to 602 Courtney Street on the ground floor of the historic Windsor Hotel. My secretary then was Doddie Gubbies (now married). She was an experienced pianist, and a wonderful sight reader.
The store next door became vacant, so we expanded and opened our first music store, selling Willis Pianos that have been made in Canada for over 100 years. We also sold organs and guitars.
Fifteen years ago, I opened my residential music studio at 850 Fleming Street in Esquimalt. We are now next door at 854 Fleming Street at Colville Road opposite Esquimalt High. The Colville bus comes within a block of our door.
Miss Lydia Eckgren is teaching Victoria's first popular sing-along Guitar Method. She also teaches Organ, Piano and Flute, day or evening lessons. Our students are all ages, but I recommend they start after seven years old. Advanced lessons are taped and amplified on our studio speakers.
Early March, we will publish the first edition of the Victoria Horizon News, Feature, "See Canada First". Send us a story of your travels and we will gladly publish it free.

Soil Survey In March

An independent engineering survey of soil and drainage problems in the Ash-Bissenden area of north Gordon Head is expected in early March.

A spokesman for Thurber Consultants Ltd. said the survey had been delayed because of unfavorable weather and the need for technical data from the department of environment. It had been anticipated earlier that work on drainage and sewer installations would be completed before winter.

But acting on engineering advice, the Saanich municipal works committee delayed the project until more detailed cost information could be obtained and to test the theory of installing, where feasible, both sewer and storm drainage systems in a single trench.

The independent survey was authorized at a cost of $6,000 to advise on the method of installation taking into consideration both drain systems, soil, groundwater and environmental aspects.

Meanwhile, municipal forces are available to carry out sewerage installations in the area south of Ash Road, which works committee was told can be done independently and by using money from the sewer enterprise fund amounting to $521,000.

Vic High Receives Accreditation

Victoria senior secondary has become the third school in the district to receive complete, four-year accreditation from the department of education.

The new accreditation system, set up last spring, involves a self-evaluation by the school staff on a wide range of criteria including the philosophy and objectives of the school, as well as an external evaluation, usually by the district superintendent.

Accreditation allows the school to recommend up to 60 per cent of its students pass a course without writing government exams and also allows the school to formulate its own courses.

The department said Vic High "appears to have furmulated a sound basic educational philosophy and set of objectives."

CANCELLED BOND ISSUE BEING RESOLD

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — San Francisco which sold $1,000 bonds to rebuild the city hall after the 1906 earthquake, reported Wednesday it is doing a brisk business selling the same certificates again for $2 to $10 each.

Public service director William Roddy found hundreds of the cancelled city bonds in the city hall basement. He decided that they were so handsomely engraved and so suitable as collectors' items that he put the cancelled documents on sale.

Other cancelled city bond issues with similarly attractive engraving are also being offered.

National Union Eyes Six More IWA Mills

The Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada has set its sights on six more sawmills where bargaining rights are held by the International Woodworkers of America.

Fred Mullin, PPWC president, disclosed today the union is organizing at Alberni Pacific Division, a MacMillan Bloedel sawmill with 640 employees in Port Alberni.

"We are confident we have the majority support of that plant," he said.

Earlier this week, the PPWC applied to the B.C. Labor Relations Board for certification at MacMillan Bloedel's Somass sawmill and shingle mill in Port Alberni, which has 1,060 employees. Bargaining rights there are held by the IWA.

Mullin also said the PPWC is organizing at four small sawmills in the Ladysmith area. These mills employ 400 men who now are with the IWA.

The sixth sawmill where PPWC is organizing is at Langley, east of Vancouver, he said.

Mullin said that, under B.C. labor law, his union has until Feb. 15 to submit certification applications at IWA mills to the B.C. Labor Relations Board.

The board, after investigating each application, can approve or reject the application, call a hearing of the parties involved or direct that a representation vote be held.

Patients Used More Blood Than Collected at Clinics

Patients in Greater Victoria hospitals again required more blood last year than residents gave through donor clinics, the annual meeting of the local Red Cross revealed Wednesday night.

While 8,951 donors registered at 68 clinics, up 111 from the year before, 856 had to be rejected for a variety of medical reasons, reducing donors to 8,095.

Over the year a total of 8,484 units of blood were issued to Royal Jubilee, Victoria General, Resthaven and Veterans hospitals from the central blood bank of the Red Cross in Vancouver.

In B.C. all blood donations go into the central bank and are issued to hospitals on the basis of need. Greater Victoria has been criticized in recent years for not supplying as much as it uses.

Other problems over collecting blood, detailed in the report of G. K. Verley, chairman of the blood donor panel:

While eight young people canvassed homes from Sidney to Jordan River through the summer, distributing over 90,000 handbills with dates, times and locations of blood donor clinics, the number of donors actually dropped by 211 over the same period the previous year.

The canvassers were hired under a Local Initiatives grant.

People who turned out to clinins at Metchosin, Sooke, Colwood and Sidney, said they would not go to city clinics because of the traffic congestion they face.

"The outlying areas are being built up and we are going to have to be like business — take our clinics to where the people are if we want more donors," said Verley's report.

In his president's report, Rear Admiral E. W. Finch-Noyes paid tribute to Red Cross youth workers "who have helped alleviate suffering and loneliness by giving of their services in the many wonderful ways that only they and their ... advisers can devise."

Volunteers make the Red Cross possible and are always welcome, he said. They are needed for such jobs as registration and inquiry in the event of a major disaster.

Elected president Wednesday night was Brig. S. E. E. Morres. First vice-president is Mrs. Wilfred Davenport and second vice-president Mr. Verley. James Black is honorary secretary-treasurer.

Woman Elected UVic Student Head

Linda Flavelle, a fourth-year education student at the University of Victoria, Wednesday became the first woman president of the Alma Mater Society in nine years.

Her twin sister, Lois Flavelle, also in fourth year education, became the AMS communications director by acclamation.

Linda, a three-year veteran of student government, defeated four male candidates for president in the elections to the AMS executive council Wednesday.

James W. Horne, was elected vice-president, Stephen John clubs director, Louise Cook chairman of academic affairs, and Ray Tenisci chairman of intramural affairs.

Vancouver Lawyer Cleared

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Lawyer Douglas Jolliff was cleared on a charge of being disrespectful to provincial Court Judge Les Bewley. Jolliff appeared before the disciplinary committee of the Law Society of British Columbia to answer a charge resulting from an incident in Judge Bewley's court last May 24.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A $400 fine and one-year probationary term were levied by Judge William Ostlef in provincial court Wednesday for an 18-year-old man who pleaded guilty to possession of a restricted drug.

Through an investigation Nov. 22, police learned that Horst Gunter Schultz, 525 William, had purchased two caps of MDA at the Kings Hotel, 568 Yates.

Schultz gave the capsules to another man in the 1300-block Government. At 7:40 p.m. a group of people, including the accused, were checked in the 500-block Johnson. The MDA was in the other man's possession.

Two men, charged jointly, were sentenced after pleading guilty to theft under $200.

David William Rolston, 19, and Duncan Charles Christopher Crow, 18, both of 1812-1147 Quadra, were arrested Jan. 16 after breaking a window in a car parked on Cook Street from which they stole a tape deck and tapes valued at $185.

They were spotted by police while committing the crime and were apprehended a short distance away.

A suspended sentence and one-year probationary term were ordered for Rolston.

A suspended sentence and 18-month term were ordered for Crow who is to take part in the Metchosin Camp program as a probation condition.

Clarence L. Larson, 33, of an unknown address, was sentenced to three months in prison for breach of probation.

Prosecutor John Macintyre told the court that Larson was sentenced to one year followed by a two-year probationary term in Nanaimo, Aug. 13, 1971 for car theft.

While bound by the probation order, Larson failed to report a change of address to his probation officer.

"This man has a substantial criminal history," said Macintyre.

More Humane Treatment of Heroin Addicts Urged

A strong plea for a more humane and rational approach to the problem of drug addiction — particularly toward heroin addits — was made in the legislature Wednesday by Gary Lauk (NDP—Vancouver Centre).

Condemning the futility of harsh punitive measures as society's answer to the problem, Lauk said the jails of the country will be filled without in any way deterring those who are addicted to drugs.

He said society looks on addiction as a disease when in fact it is only a symptom of a disease, which is "here in this room and in society at large."

"We can't say to these people 'you are lepers' and cut them off," he said.

Lauk, a lawyer, said he had "first-hand knowledge" of the sad story of addiction. He had walked away from emergency wards where he had seen children die from drug overdoses, and from prison cells where inmates had hanged themselves.

He charged that Vancouver's Narcotics Addiction Foundation does little to help the city's 15,000 addicts, and rather than treating them, it is little more than "an experimental centre . . . a sop on the public conscience . . . a fraud on the public."

Lauk also claimed that the Alcoholism Foundation of B.C. "treats no one," and expressed doubt whether either body would continue to receive much in the way of financial help from the provincial government.

(The NAF grants from the government this fiscal year total $4,000,000, while the Alcoholic Foundation receives $325,000.)

Lauk earlier urged public recognition of the need to give all possible help to immigrants, whom he described as "Canada's children." He said immigrants deserve more help than they are receiving now, not only from the federal governmnent but also from the provincial level.

He appealed to all MLAs to help the NDP government "break down the cultural and economic barriers to the Good Life for everyone," and to "help us create a new order of social justice."

In the opening words of his contribution to the throne speech debate, Lauk gleefully taunted members of the official Social Credit Opposition, and also ripped off some colorful cracks at the expense of Liberal leader David Anderson.

Expressing his disappointment at the performance to date of the Socreds, he termed them "the remnants of a vaudeville act," and said they only needed "some creampies and seltzer bottles to complete the image."

Instead of offering reasoned argument in the house they produced "unresearched, groundless accusations based upon gut reaction."

"What is your philosophy? Why do you now exist?" he said, claiming that all that is left of the party now is vindictiveness and bitterness.

Noting that Opposition leader W. A. C. Bennett is "on the high seas' and not present at the session, Lauk urged the Socreds to get on and choose Jim Chabot (SC—Columbia River) for the job.

"He wants the job so badly his tongue isn't just hanging out, it's tearing from the roots," he quipped.

Lauk admitted the Liberals were "a little more to the point," if somewhat confused on certain issues. But he couldn't resist a dig at Andeson for his speech the previous day.

He said Anderson had treated the house to his "golly-gee-whizz-style picked from the grab bag of old school tie cliches."

STUDENT DEBATES

Independent school students from across B.C. will meet at Victoria's St. Michael's University School Saturday to compete for the oldest debating trophy in the province.

The Newman Cup, a donation of a group of University of British Columbia students, is now held by York House school for girls in Vancouver.

Saturday's debates, for students from 15 to 20, will mark the first time the competition has been held on Vancouver Island.

"Be it resolved that the state should not be the guardian of morality," is the topic for the Newman Cup, while younger students, up to Grade 10 will debate, "Be it resolved that leisure time is an increasing menace to modern society."

The younger students will be competing for the Federation of Independent Schools Association Cup.

Debates begin at 10 a.m.

'Saturday Night Sailors' in Limelight

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Canada's "Saturday night sailors" had their place in the sun Wednesday noon.

It was the 50th anniversary of formation of the Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve with an authorized complement of 70 officers and 930 men.

They were lauded by Prime Minister Trudeau and in Halifax, Vice-Admiral Robert Timbrell, commander of maritime command, sang their praises.

The main brace was spliced in many, if not all the 16 reserve divisions across Canada.

The Victoria division was no different. Toasts were tossed in the wardroom of HMCS Malahat in CFB Esquimalt.

Highest-ranking plaudits handed out in the wardroom of the local division were by Rear-Admiral R. H. Leir, maritime commander Pacific.

Leir congratulated the "Saturday night sailors" for providing his command with "the best buy" in service and commitment.

Some of those attending the Victoria celebration did not realize that the 50th anniversary celebrations were almost 10 years late for the local unit.

Long before the rest of Canada became reserve-minded and during the birth pangs of the Royal Canadian Navy Victoria had its own particular breed of "Saturday night sailors."

Endowed with a love of the sea and a healthy dollop of pioneer spirit, a group of unpaid volunteers formed what they called a Company of Volunteer Reserves.

They were joined by local members of the Navy League of Canada, a fledgling national organization at that time committed to work for a strong maritime force, both merchant and, hopefully some day, a navy.

The unofficial Victoria reserves used to parade in what was then HMC Dockyard, having their first drill on Aug. 14, 1913.

There were 61 members on hand to be sworn in July 9, 1914, when the group became the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve.

Their particular brand of enthusiasn was reflected in their successors at Wednesday's celebrations, including Malahat's commanding and executive officers, Cmdr. E. K. Lee and Lt-Cmdr. J. B. L. Walter.

They appeared ready, willing and eager to get going as Leir told newsmen of the expanding role naval reserve divisions will be playing in Canada's peacetime years.

For the first time, Canada's 3,000 naval reservists are being assigned special peacetime operational tasks which will increase over a five-year period.

An expanding scope of activities including helping regular force and civilian departments in such areas as anti-pollution patrols, search and rescue, clearance diving, assisting the Emergency Measures Organization, oceanographic research, fisheries' patrols, sovereignty and surveillance patrols and other duties.

To carry out these roles, the reservists will be trained to man "minor warships" up to coastal minesweeper size.

These additional roles, added to the reservists' basic one of providing a trained nucleus in time of war, could make them an even better "buy" for the defence dollar.

It could also lead to Saturday night sailors putting in the longest "nights" on record.

Reporter Charged With Theft

WASHINGTON — Reporter Leslie Whitten Jr., an associate of columnist Jack Anderson, has been arrested and charged with possessing government documents stolen in November from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Whitten, 44, denied the charges and said "I was just out covering the story."

Anderson said in a statement that Whitten's arrest was "an outrageous violation of the first amendment for doing his job as a reporter."

"He stole no documents," Anderson said. "He is only guilty of writing a story of stolen documents. The story, of course, had been highly embarrassing to the government. It's a story of how the government cheated and defrauded and neglected the Indians in violation of their treaty rights."

SEATTLE — A police detective made a pretty good case for the screening of prospective policemen with a lie detector.

Dewey Gillespie said a "top candidate" for the Seattle force flunked a polygraph test when "he admitted use, buying and selling of narcotics, shoplifting, property damage, car prowling, pulling false fire alarms, thefts of money and merchandise from employers, vandalism and contributing to the delinquency of a minor."

CORK, Ireland — James Barlow, who gave up his job as a public health inspector and became one of Britain's best-selling novelists, was found dead Tuesday at his home. He was 51.

Barlow reached the best-seller ranks with his fourth novel, The Patriots. Two of his other books were filmed Term of Trial starring Laurence Olivier and Burden of Proof, released under the title Villain and starring Richard Burton.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — A former trombone player with Duke Ellington's band is to become a Roman Catholic priest this month.

John Sanders, 47, of New York is to be ordained here Feb. 10. Most Rev. Walter Curtis, Bishop of Bridgeport, will celebrate the ordination mass.

The Ellington band will be playing in the Bridgeport area in February, and Ellington is expected to attend the ordination mass.

WASHINGTON — Recluse billionaire Howard Hughes, singer Frank Sinatra and two executives of a computer company that was recently investigated by a House of Representatives subcommittee were among top contributors to President Nixon's re-election campaign during its final days.

Reports filed with the General Accounting Office show Hughes, the eccentric aviation pioneer who has not been seen in public for many years, spread $18,000 in contributions over half a dozen Nixon committees.

Glassy Eye Proves Sobriety

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Retired investor Keith Lidgerwood's eyes were bloodshot, glazed and watery when he was taken to a police station to be charged with drunk driving, a Launceston, Tasmania, magistrate's court was told today.

Counsel for Lidgerwood asked a police witness: "Both eyes?"

"Yes," said Police Sgt. George Atkins.

"Were they both the same?" persisted the lawyer.

"Yes," said the witness.

Seconds later Lidgerwood, 64, removed his glass right eye and placed it on the ledge of the court dock.

The case was dismissed.

Friday Likely Jail Date

QUEBEC (CP) — At least two of three Quebec labor leaders who lost a bid Wednesday for a Supreme Court of Canada review of contempt-of-court citations will probably go to jail Friday, says Justice Minister Jerome Choquette.

"There have been discussions between their lawyers and the justice department," Mr. Choquette told a news conference Wednesday, "and it seems that at least Mr. Yvon Charbonneau and Mr. Marcel Pepin will present themselves voluntarily Friday."

Pepin is president of the Trade Unions (CNTU) and Charbonneau, president of the Quebec Teachers Corp. (QTC).

The third labor leader, Louis Laberge, president of the Quebec Federation of Labor, drove to Florida recently on vacation and is not expected back before next week.

The three were cited for contempt last May for asking hospital workers to ignore injunctions ordering them back to work during Quebec's public service strike.

9 IN MEMORIAM

CARMICHAEL — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Alfred, who passed away Jan. 30, 1963.
Deep in our hearts you are fondly remembered,
Sweet, happy memories cling round your name;
True hearts that loved you with deepest affection,
Always will love you in death just the same.
—Always remembered by wife Jane and family.

CROASDALE — In memory of my dear husband Fred, passed away Feb. 1, 1971, also our only child Douglas, died Aug. 31, 1935.
Just a spray of beautiful memories
Tied with all my love;
Memories to cherish forever
Of my husband and son I dearly loved.
—From his loving wife, Sabina.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

The Great Vitamin E Controversy

During the years I've been writing this column, I have occasionally received a letter from someone who was curious about whether or not Vitamin E is valuable. I knew Professor Herbert Evans, in whose laboratory Vitamin E was isolated. We were good friends and I learned much about Vitamin E from him.

He said, it had been extremely difficult to isolate, because E is scattered so widely through most foods, and he had a hard time designing a diet low in it for his rats.

Evans concluded that anyone who eats a varied diet will get all the E he needs and felt that doctors can quickly tell a new vitamin's value by having a person go without it for awhile and seeing if he develops any sort of disease.

Without enough D, an infant may grow up with bow legs. Without B, a person can develop beri-beri, or without C, he can develop scurvy.

But a good many scientists have tried giving persons a diet low in Vitamin E, and most have been unable to discover any typical ill effects.

Having seen interest in E dwindle and die out years ago, I have naturally viewed the recent tremendous craze over it with a certain amount of surprise. In magazines, on television, and over the radio I hear Vitamin E being extolled for any number of ailments, ranging from acne to warts. I am told that today one of the items most often called for in drugstores in the United States is Vitamin E. It is supposed to cure heart disease, impotence, aging, and 57 other conditions.

One of the dangers in this great enthusiasm for vitamins is shown by an article in Today's Health which says there are some 4,000 cases of vitamin poisoning each year in the United States. Of these, 3,200 involve children under five years of age.

Dr. F. J. Lovejoy, executive secretary of the Boston Poison Information Centre, notes that Americans spend some $350 million a year on vitamins, bought "over the counter" without a doctor's prescription. He said that "after the first year of life, vitamins are not normally needed because they are present in sufficient quantities in properly selected foods."

1—NORTH SAANICH. Everything about this unique property is appealing. The lines and design of the cedar siding house are most eye pleasing and are in harmony with its acre size, beautifully treed lot. The profile of the land to it's 166 foot seafrontage provides sufficient slope so that a panoramic view of Satellite Channel is afforded from most rooms of the house. The year old Abbott-built home is charming throughout, from it's antique brickwork in the kitchen, it's three graciously appointed suites, separate from one another, yet grouped in a practical manner around generously proportioned living area. The price is a most realistic $88,750. For appointment to view call:

Violence Backs Nixon's Gun Curb Plea

Times News Services

A wave of violence is sweeping the United States, leading President Nixon to demand tighter gun control laws in the wake of the shooting robbery of a 71-year-old Senator Tuesday.

Even as Sen. John Stennis, robbed of a watch and 25 cents ouside his home, hovered near death in a Maryland military hospital and the president made his plea for stringent firearm curbs, police in the U.S. capital were hunting "a walking arsenal" in connection with four killings Wednesday.

Also, two Milwaukee policemen were gunned down and slain last night as they attempted to apprehend four men in connection with a robbery investigation.

In West Palm Beach, Fla., Wednesday, the brutally-mutilated body of a 33-year-old antique dealer was discovered by police.

And the governors of two states, Illinois and Florida, are considering posting of national guard troops at two racially-troubled high schools where bottle-throwing and shooting incidents have disrupted classes for the past week.

Washington police say the man they are hunting for the four slayings—three of them in one house — is a navy deserter, Bruce Shreeves, who is carrying two pistols and in further wild west style has a .303 rifle strapped to his arm and triggered so that he can fire it from under his shirt.

Shreeves is also wanted in connection with a slaying in a Washington suburb last week and the abduction of real estate broker.

They say three of Wednesday's victims, all men, were found on the floor of a house dead of multiple gun wounds. Additionally, the throat of the owner of the house had been slit.

In the Milwaukee case, the two officers who were on prowl car duty were slain moments after they had radioed for assistance in apprehending four suspects who were standing on a street corner.

One man was later picked up in another part of the city, his hands cuffed together and held in connection with the killings.

West Palm Beach police say the man who bludgeoned and then shot antique dealer Charles Belcher was a "sexual psychotic." After death, the victims body had been mutilated with a knife.

Troops in Chicago and Pensacola are on standby after violence fired at two high schools.

In Chicago, 17 students were arrested Wednesday after what began as a cafeteria sit-in by Puerto Rican students erupted into a bottle-throwing and shooting spree in which six policemen were indured.

At the Florida school, five students were taken into custody after fighting broke out between black and white students.

Gov. Reuben Askew said that he was considering ordering the school closed for the rest of the year to stem any further violence.

BOY WITH GUN HELD IN BAY STORE DRAMA

WINNIPEG (CP) — Police arrested a 15-year-old juvenile Wednesday night following reports that four armed men were inside the downtown Hudson's Bay Co. department store.

The reports later proved to be false.

The 90-minute drama began about 7:30 Wednesday night when a watchman came across the juvenile armed with a pellet gun. The juvenile pointed the weapon at the watchman and said three other men, also armed, were in the store.

The watchman telephoned police.

Several officers, armed with shotguns and hand-guns, stationed themselves at store entrances. Others, accompanied by a dog, searched the store for the "other three men."

A police spokesman said in an interview later the youth said he intended to steal some clothing, hide in the building until the store reopened this morning, then leave.

Blakeney Firm

REGINA (CP) — Premier Allan Blakeney Wednesday reaffirmed his stand that grants administered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the Regional Development Incentives Act have favored Quebec and denied that his position is divisive and harmful to Canadian unity.

Tax Evasion

EDMONTON (CP) — A Red Deer hauling company and its director pleaded guilty Wednesday to evading about $58,000 in federal income tax through personal trips at company expense, duplicate expense accounts and non-existent foreign exchange transactions.

School Meeting

REGINA (CP) — Representatives of the province's school trustees association and the teacher's federation met Wednesday with education minister Gordon MacMurchy. About the only matter both sides agreed on is that they would meet the minister again next Wednesday and that more representatives from each side would attend.

Caution Urged

EDMONTON (CP) — Farmers should be cautious in their response to a call by government officials and agriculture-business organizations to produce all they can in the coming year, Bill Dascavich of Edmonton, a regional co-ordinator for the National Farmers Union, says.

It was predictable that the food trade, farm equipment companies, land salesmen, lending institutions and "others who make their profits off the farmer's back will be playing on the optimism of farmers to lure them into carrying a heavy debt load," he added.

Pollutant Curbs

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Clean Environment Commission has taken steps to reduce the discharge of atmospheric pollutants from the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company smelter at Flin Flon. The commission has issued a licence to the company to discharge pollutants into the atmosphere, but the company must reduce emissions by Nov. 1, 1974 to meet conditions of the licence.

Pay Boost Sought

REGINA (CP) — The city's 220 firemen will seek an 18.7 per cent wage increase when their contract expires Feb. 28. In a letter to city council, the firemen say the increase would be necessary for parity with counterparts in other cities in Western Canada with more than 100,000 population. A first-class fireman now makes $814 a month.

Taxi Fares Up

REGINA (CP) — City council has approved an increase in taxi fares, the first since 1968. The first one-fifth of a mile will cost 50 cents, compared with the old rate of 50 cents for the first one-quarter mile. A 10 cent charge will be levied for each additional fifth of a mile, instead of each quarter mile.

TV Station Bid

Brandon (CP) — An application has been filed with the Candadian Radio-Television Commission to establish a new English-language television station in Winnipeg. It would be the city's third outlet.

Writing Workshop In Nanaimo

A writing workshop for Vancouver Island senior high school students will be held at Nanaimo senior secondary Feb. 23 and 24.

About 75 students from 12 schools will hear from W. O. Mitchell, author of Who Has Seen the Wind; Lionel Kearns, poet, author of By the Light of the Silvery McLune; and Cam Hubert, playwright, author of Windigo.

"It should be a really good event," says John Hodgins, Grade 11 writing teacher and sponsor of the workshop.

"It will be a chance for young writers to get together and talk."

A dinner, put on by Nanaimo and District senior secondary, and a public reading by W. O. Mitchell will be held Friday night.

Seminars with each of the three writers will run continuously on Saturday. Cost per student will be $3.

Hodgins said students from Claremont, Mount Doug and Reynolds schools in Victoria will attend.

Port Too Shallow For Supertanker

New 250,000-ton oil supertankers will not be coming to the Atlantic-Richfield refinery at Cherry Point, refinery manager W. J. Racine said in Victoria Wednesday.

He was commenting on a report that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is searching the west coast, especially Puget Sound, for potential harbors capable of handling the huge new tankers.

Racine told a meeting sponsored at the Empress by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce that the supertankers need docking facilities 90 feet deep and Atlantic-Richfield's docking area is only 65 feet deep.

He said his understanding is the supertankers are designed for use in the Gulf of Mexico and the Delaware basin.

Col. William Vandenberg, co-ordinator of the search by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, said the search for possible new ports was being concentrated mainly in Puget Sound, San Francisco Bay and the Los Angeles-Long Beach area.

Vandenberg said his study team was looking for areas that can be deepened or where run pipe lines could be run perhaps miles at sea to reach the tankers.

Anderson attended the Racine meeting but did not ask any questions.

Meanwhile, a written question from the audience asked Racine: "Of major concern to Victorians is the probability of a tanker breaking up on our west coast. How do you reconcile this damage to Canada's environment and as a place for U.S. energy needs and profit for your company?"

Racine said: "I can't reconcile it. I doubt if the total argument will ever be reconciled. The only thing I can do is give you a few facts.

NO COLLISION

"Oil has been coming down from Alaska to California for about 20 years without a collision or a tanker breakup and hopefully the equipment we are using now controls, communication equipment, scrubbing of ships and controls by the U.S. Coast Guard—make things safer.

"Obviously nobody builds a tanker to go aground or break up. From a purely financial viewpoint, as you bring up, it is wise to take care of your equipment."

At the start of the meeting, Victoria chamber president Terry Farmer said the chamber was greatly concerned at the provincial government's decision against a late night ferry run from Vancouver.

He received an ovation when he said Victoria groups and citizens should urge Highways Minister Robert Strachan to change his mind and take a second look at the issue.

ELEVATOR FIRMS, MEN SUED

TORONTO (CP) — Five elevator companies and a union involved in a strike against them were named in a suit filed Wednesday by 32 Metropolitan Toronto developers who say they've been left with 9,000 unrentable apartment suites because of a lack of elevators.

The suit, brought by a coalition of commercial and residential builders, claims for past and future damages caused by the loss of rental income.

The suit also seeks an injunction to end the strike of elevator installers and maintenance men, belonging to the 2,300-member International Union of Elevator Constructors.

Meanwhile, the five-month strike ended in Quebec province with the union returned to work today.

But Warner Baxter, chief union negotiator who announced the development at Montreal, said the move was a result of a back-to-work order issued by Quebec Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer and was being made "under protest."

Quake Toll 30

Moves Delaying Start of Mine

Development of the Sukunka Valley coal mine has been cut back until the provincial government decides upon a royalty rate and a location for a loading port.

Reduction in the development program was announced by A. W. Farmilo, president of Mikas Oil Co. Ltd. of Calgary.

Mikas also has been granted an extension by Brameda Resources Ltd. of Vancouver on its option to purchase control of the mine.

Deadline for exercising the option had been Jan. 31.

In exchange for a payment of $10.65 million Mikas is to be given 52.5 per cent control of the Sukunka mine and the right to develop it.

Mikas already holds a 5 per cent interest. Coalition Mining Ltd. of Vancouver controls another 7.5 per cent. Both Mikas and Coalition are wholly-owned subsidiaries of Brascan Ltd. of Toronto.

Consumation of the deal would give Brascan 60 per cent control, through its subsidiaries.

Brameda has said it has no choice but to sell majority control because the Vancouver-based company did not have the necessary funds to develop the underground coal mine. Development cost is estimated at $50 million.

Farmilo said Mikas had requested the extension on its option and had cut back on development and feasibility studies pending a clarification of its agreement with the provincial government.

The previous government had said Sukunka coal would be exported from Squamish at the minimum royalty of 25 cents a ton.

Premier Barrett has said the royalty will be increased and Squamish would not be used as an exporting port. Britannia Beach might be selected but no decision had been made.

Mikas has cut back on its market research programs and its feasibility study as well, Farmilo said.

Anne Murray Tries For U.K. Listeners

LONDON (CP) — Singer Anne Murray may be a household name in Canada, but when it comes to breaking into the British and European pop music market, she has to stand in line with hordes of talented artists looking for openings.

However, it looks as though her number had come up.

Anne flies home to Toronto today after three weeks in London. In an attempt to win the kind of popularity she enjoys in Canada, the singer recorded a series of television and radio shows performing songs which, she hopes, will appeal to a wide audience in Britain.

During the visit, she attended a music festival in Cannes, southern France, where more than 5,000 representatives of the world's pop music business gathered to listen to new talent.

"It was like a slave market," Anne recalled in an interview Wednesday. "I was the new talent from Canada and given three songs to prove myself. Still, people buzzed about me, I think."

APPEARS AT CLUB

Among her appearances in London, 27-year-old Anne played at the West End's Talk of The Town night-spot, a milestone in the careers of most up-and-coming artists on the British pop music circuit.

"I reached a peak in Canada 18 months ago," Anne, a native of Springhill, N.S., said. "England provides a new challenge for me. I want to be able to tour here to full houses and get my records high into the charts."

While British disc jockeys are already giving her songs plenty of air play, there still are a few barriers she has to break through to feel at home here.

"Welcome Anne Murray, the girl who shot to fame with a song called Snowman."

The song was, in fact, Snowbird.

Gorge Road Hospital Seeks Beds

Gorge Road Hospital wants to add 50 rehabilitation beds and will apply to have the project included in a regional hospital building referendum next month, the board chairman said Wednesday.

Mrs. Irene Warren was speaking at the official opening of a 300-bed addition to the hospital, for extended care patients. Several hundred people were on hand for the ceremony, conducted by Health Minister Dennis Cocke.

The rehabilitation part of the hospital has 100 beds and has consistently had a waiting list of about 100 in recent months.

Anscomb Eulogy

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald Wednesday praised Herbert Anscomb, a former provincial finance minister who died last November.

He said the former B.C. Tory leader spoke "from his head, his heart and his guts" and was never "bland, urbane or unctuous." Macdonald said he praised him even though he agreed with him on "practically nothing."

"He was a Tory, not even a 'red Tory' ", said Macdonald.

"When politics becomes too bland we will miss a man like Mr. Anscomb."

He was a cabinet minister from 1941 to 1952 in the Liberal-Conservative Coalition government in British Columbia.

CAMBRIDGE WINS

CAMBRIDGE (CP) — Cambridge United beat Crewe Alexandra 1-0 in an English League Division IV soccer match Wednesday night.

Mill to Get Nfld. Cash

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — More government investment in a huge linerboard mill on Newfoundland's west coast and a reshaping of electoral boundaries were forecast Wednesday in a throne speech opening the provincial legislature.

The speech also announced proposals to set up a $40-million fund for construction of modern fishing vessels, an offshore petroleum industrial advisory council and conflict-of-interest legislation.

Sweet Peas Started Now Ensure Fragrant Summer

Early this month is the time for a start on sweet pea growing. Only by taking this opportunity can local gardeners get the full season of blooming from this popular old fashioned flower.

When seed is sown outdoors in late April or plants are bought at that time, bloom cannot be expected until about the end of June or even into July. The plants are the better deal, for they will be three weeks or more ahead if they are well grown, but why not sow the seeds yourself now?

You need to first set up a five-inch bottomless wooden box about 18 inches square outdoors in a sheltered sunny spot. If you already have a suitable coldframe you are well ahead. A fitted glass cover is also needed, and some kind of soft covering like burlap or an old car rug.

After choosing your sweet pea seeds for color and type, sow them in either a shallow wood seedbox or around the edge of shallow five-inch pots, an inch apart.

The soil mixture should be equal parts of clean sand, leafmould or peat and screened compost. Have it moderately moist for sowing and do not tap firmly until after the seeds are sown.

This is tedious, or impossible for some fingers. Soaking in water for 24 hours is the alternative. Do not soak nicked seeds.

Make inch deep holes with a pencil-sized stick and drop one seed in each. Press the soil gently with the bottom of a smaller flower pot, settling it to about a half inch below the rim.

After labelling each container, slip it into a plastic bag. Keep it in a 60 deg. F. temperature indoors for the five days or so before germination commences.

As soon as the first shoot is seen sprouting, take the pots or boxes out to the prepared frame. Remove the bags and set the containers in the frame. Cover with the glass and extra, dry cloth cover on frosty nights. The glass must be clean.

You want slow even growth. Prop the glass cover open during the days, replacing only on frosty nights. If needed, and only then, water a little, especially be careful until all seeds are sprouted.

As soon as the second pair of leaves is seen, pinch out the growing tip of each plant. This is helpful in making a strong plant and must not be delayed.

With lengthening days, growth will be quite rapid by early March, and more water will be needed. The glass cover can be off entirely on mild days, admitting gentle rains.

Planting into the garden will be in April and first flowers should be in early June for most kinds of sweet peas.

SOLUTION FRIDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

A woman walking down the street was approached by two little unkempt boys, ages about four and seven. The older urchin said: "For a nickle, my little brudder will imitate a chicken." Smiling, and handing him a nickle, she said: "Well, isn't that fun! What does he do, cackle?"

The reply came: "Lady when you do business with us, you don't get cheap substitutes. He eats a worm."

Which leads us to the subject of going "chicken" at the bridge table. And, like the ragamuffin's kid brother, when an expert occasionally goes chicken, he goes first class all the way. The deal arose in a rubber-bridge game.

♣ A Q 10

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
3 ♠	Dbl.	4 ♠	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡.

West's opening three-spade bid did not measure up to standards, but who can quarrel with success? North's take-out double was normal, as was East's pre-emptive rise to four spades.

When the bidding reached South, he was at a loss as to what action to take. He knew that North had a powerful hand, and that the likelihood existed that a slam could be made. But he didn't know which suit to bid, hearts or diamonds. And if he did bid one of these suits, at what level should he bid it, five or six?

So, beset by uncertainty, he turned chicken-hearted to make sure of getting a profit. He doubled the four-spade bid, for penalties. As he admitted later, he knew that he was taking the path of least resistance, but if he embarked on a slam he might lose everything. In his opinion, his chicken-heartedness was justified on the basis that "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush."

As the doubled four-spade contract, West went down one trick, for a loss of 100 points. North-South could have made a grand slam in hearts, diamonds, or clubs, scoring 2410 in hearts, and 2340 in clubs or diamonds.

Of course, the cause of South's becoming "chicken" was the highly aggressive bidding of East and West. It pushed South to an altitude where the air is rarified and where the breathing becomes difficult, resulting in South's acceptance of a sure profit.

BAGPIPES SWITCHED

NORTH SHIELDS, England (CP) — Electrician Tommy Richardson has put the wind up Britain's bagpipe players. He's invented electrically-operated bagpipes, designed for pop groups looking for a new sound.

The pipes may soon be on the market at £20 (about $48) a set, less than half the price of conventional ones. "I think they have great potential," Richardson said.

Truce Teams Off Friday

Times News Services

SAIGON — The first 24 members of the four-power Vietnam truce observer team will disperse into the South Vietnamese countryside Friday, according to Michael Gauvin, head of the Canadian contingent.

The observers are being assigned posts despite the number of ceasefire violations being reported from different parts of the country. Heavy fighting is continuing in the northern provinces, but the number of attacks and counterattacks is decreasing.

The Saigon command said there were 188 Communist attacks during the 24 hours ending at 6 a.m. today, compared with 209 in the previous 24 hours, 311 in the 24 hours before that and 426 in the first 22 hours after the ceasefire went into effect.

Gauvin, acting chairman of the supervisory body, said inspection teams will be sent to three centres across South Vietnam.

Gauvin said three teams of eight soldiers each will visit facilities in Hue and Da Nang in northern South Vietnam and Pleiku in the central highlands.

Each team consists of two soldiers from each commission member country.

The three sites are among seven regional centres established under the Paris peace agreement for supervising the ceasefire.

The 130 Canadian troops and their supervisors have been ready to go into the field since Monday but their departure has been delayed by the lack of safeguards.

A delegation at the deputy head level was to meet today with representatives of the North Vietnam and Viet Cong delegations to the JMC, the first such meeting it has been possible to arrange.

A full meeting, at the ambassador level, was expected later in the day.

The ICCS met Wednesday with the other members of the JMC — the U.S. and South Vietnamese.

Gauvin has described the meetings with the Americans and South Vietnamese as "most satisfactory."

Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam of South Vietnam returned from Paris and Washington and said he believes the fighting will stop once the international truce teams are in place.

He said if there is a large North Vietnamese invasion, "the countries in the agreement are committed to act but it is up to them to decide what to do."

Six chartered jetliners carried about 1,200 U.S. servicemen home today, dropping U.S. troop strength in Vietnam below the 20,000 mark, the U.S. command said.

Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai accused the U.S. today of failing to stop its "war of aggression" against Cambodia and Laos despite signing the Vietnam peace agreement.

The premier, speaking at a Peking banquet honoring North Vietnamese chief negotiator LeDuc Tho and Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Thinh, said he hopes the U.S. government and Saigon authorities will "refrain from procrastination, expansion and sabbotage" so that the peace agreement might be turned into a reality.

Meanwhile, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the exiled Cambodian leader, has decided to order his armed forces to stop all offensive attacks and has stated his readiness to reconcile himself with the U.S.; Communist diplomatic sources said today.

Industry Boost Pledged

Trade Minister Alex Macdonald said Wednesday in the legislature he considers the price of concrete "excessively high" and added: "I think another cement industry is a perfectly feasible enterprise for B.C. to engage in . . . .

"We have the limestone and we have a need for competition," he told the house.

He promised that all opportunities for developing secondary industry on the basis of resources now largely unexploited will be closely examined.

For example, he said the province is sitting on a "gold mine of peat", with large reserves on the Lower Mainland and in the Queen Charlotte Islands. This could prove to be of great importance to the province in creating jobs and export dollars.

Macdonald's comments came as he announced details of a "spanking new" department and new strategy to meet the pressing need for industrial reserves in the province.

DENIES HINT

The latter policy, he said, could extend to the building of warehouse and other facilities on fully-serviced sites which would be available on a lease basis where industrial operations are "logically able to survive."

Later, outside the house, the minister denied that he was hinting the government might enter the concrete business directly. He said he was only illustrating a case where the proposed industrial development corporation would be able to initiate action to help new enterprises.

On another aspect of the government's industrial philosophy, the minister said there will be emphasis on dispersing secondary industry throughout the province, to ensure that it doesn't all concentrate on the Lower Mainland.

Wherever possible, the new corporation would try to assist industries wishing to locate in the province's small towns, such as McBride, which would otherwise "go down the drain one by one" in 20 or 30 years' time.

ADVISORY BODY

Macdonald also announced the formation of a Pacific Council, by the governments of B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan, which will advise them "how to break the bottlenecks in the transportation system."

He said the councils' role in this field will be to study and advise on the transportation of grain, potash, sulphur, coal and other commodities and to concert the efforts of the western provinces where there are common problems.

Certainly, he added, such a problem does exist in terms of the present "freight rate discrimination against the West."

Macdonald's statement on the formation of the new body followed discussions he held earlier in January with Roy Romanow, Saskatchewan's attorney-general, and with Fred Peacock, minister of industry and commerce in Alberta.

Bombed Bus

British soldiers surround a bus in Belfast as N. Ireland police investigate bombing which took the life of a Roman Catholic worker and injured nine others.

Ulster IRA, UDA Heading Toward All-Out Warfare

BELFAST (AP) — Three teen-agers bombed a busload of Roman Catholic workers in a Belfast suburb today, killing one and injuring nine, as Northern Ireland's Catholic and Protestant guerrillas squared off for all-out war against each other.

Eyewitnesses said the three youths waved down the bus as it was on its way to the site of a new Catholic school. When it stopped, they threw the bomb inside, then escaped.

The bombing raised to 697 the confirmed death toll in 3½ years of religious warfare in Northern Ireland.

The militant Protestants of the Ulster Defence Association announced Tuesday that because of Irish Republican Army "provocations," they could no longer hold Protestant extremists in check and would not try.

The Catholics of the Irish Republican Army replied that they would take "ruthless retaliatory action" for the killing of Catholics. The Ulster Defence Association said this was "a virtual declaration of war."

Gunmen have killed five persons in Belfast since Monday. Four were Catholics, and three of those were teen-agers. The fifth was an Ulster Defence Association member.

The Irish Republican Army accused the Ulster Defence Association of giving a green light to sectarian killings "on the scale hitherto unknown." It said: "A new phase of sectarian killings will not be tolerated. The IRA will utilize all its resources to end sectarian killings for all time."

The Ulster Defence Association said the Irish Republican Army men are murderers and hypocrites, and "we will not permit them to thrive."

"The thunder clouds are gathering, and here are the first flashes of lightning," said one security officer.

The assassins continued working Wednesday night.

A cry of "Hey you!" halted a 17-year-old Catholic boy walking home in Belfast. When he turned, a gunman shot him in the stomach. His condition today was critical.

A police officer was shot in the back as he parked his car at his home in Downpatrick, County Down. Stray bullets went through a window of the house and hit his nine-year-old daughter. Both were in serious condition.

Nishga Case Not Over

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The federal government intends to send a ruling of the Supreme Court on Indian land rights back into the lap of the top court.

Justice Minister Otto Lang told the Commons Wednesday that he was dissatisfied with the split by seven members of the Supreme Court on the claim to northern land by the Nishga tribe and he intended to press Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien to demand that the matter be brought up again — this time before the full nine-justice court.

Former prime minister John Diefenbaker had earlier asked the government to refer the question to a full bench "so this question can be settled once and for all."

Diefenbaker said the decision by the seven was not conclusive because three of the judges denied the appeal on its merits and three upheld it.

The seventh judge, Mr. Justice Louis-Philippe Pigeon, rejected the appeal on the technical grounds that it could come before the court only with the authorization of the lieutenant-governor of the province and this had not been obtained.

Wally Firth (NDP—Northwest Territories), a Metis, again asked the government to adopt as its own his motion to form a Commons committee that would investigate Indian land claims.

As a motion from a private member, it is doubtful if the move would ever be debated in this session of Parliament.

Government House leader Allan MacEachen said he would confer with Chretien soon on Firth's suggestion.

He said the judgment had implications far beyond British Columbia.

Hanoi Aid Terms

By MURREY MARDER
Washington Post

(Marder has just returned from a two-week reporting trip to North Vietnam. He was the only American newsman in that country when the ceasefire was announced.)

WASHINGTON — North Vietnam is anxious for foreign aid to help re-build its war-ravaged economy. But its war psychosis is still very much in evidence. In peace as in war, its officials emphasize, "no one will be permitted to infringe on our sovereignty."

The White House announcement Wednesday that presidential adviser Henry Kissinger will visit Hanoi Feb. 10-13 to discuss postwar relationships between the two nations is a swift move to begin healing the wounds of war. North Vietnam's leadership is evidently eager to begin the repair process quickly — for multiple reasons of its own.

Nothing more graphically issustrates the totally pragmatic and adaptive policies of North Vietnam when it decides that its vital interests are at stake than the decision of its leadership to receive Kissinger so quickly in their war-battered capital.

Right now, throughout Hanoi and most of the cities, towns and villages of North Vietnam, flamingly-illustrated billboards, banners and posters condemn President Nixon as the arch-criminal of the war. On some of the posters,

FULL RENT CURBS SET BY QUEBEC

QUEBEC (CP) — All rental housing in Quebec will be subject to rent controls in 1973 under legislation to be presented in the national assembly when it reconvenes Feb. 20, Justice Minister Jerome Choquette said Wednesday.

Choquette said the legislation resulted from "a very considerable number" of rent increases across the province.

In Montreal Tuesday a spokesman at the local rental control board office said more than 50,000 calls have poured into his office since Jan. 5 from tenants protesting rent hikes of up to 50 per cent.

Choquette told a news conference the bill, called a "law to prevent abusive increases in rents in 1973," will enable tenants who feel they are facing unnreasonable increases to take their case before a Quebec Rental Board.

The board, already in existence, is authorized to conciliate landlord-tenant disputes and knock down any rent increases it finds unjustified.

The rental board, which considers such things as improvements to the property and money laid out for such improvements, local economic conditions, the condition of the building and tax changes, can grant the rent increase asked by the landlord, order him to continue to provide the premises at the old rent, or set the rental at any figure between the old and the new, the justice minister said.

Bilingualism: Passing Frill?

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Too many top federal administrators continue to view bilingualism as a "passing and exceptional frill, a luxury to be tacked on to regular budgets only if normal operating budgets allow it," Keith Spicer, Commissioner of Official Languages, says in a report to Parliament released Wednesday.

And Spicer provides readers of his almost 600-page-long and, of course, bilingual report with some spicy examples of this attitude that would sour the heart of Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson.

For example, there was one department which had the seeming audacity to ask treasury board in 1972 for an additional $120,000 for bilingual signs.

Spicer adds that this request was presumably based on the premise that nowhere in the department's more-than-$300-million budget for 1971-72 could this "relatively modest sum be squeezed out."

Though not within his jurisdiction, Spicer dwelt on teaching second-language skills in Canada, and called it "a country-wide catastrophe."

Funds given the provinces to help pay for language training, to reach $300 million by 1974, have not produced the desired result, the report says, and Spicer has received many complaints about misuse of such funds by the provinces.

To help improve language-teaching programs Spicer suggests formation of a "linguistic volunteer corps" of students to act as native-speaking assistants to language teachers, an idea used successfully in West Germany and France.

The federal government is considering a pilot program of 200 such volunters who would receive about $3,500 a year each, the report says.

Another department cited by Spicer, with a yearly operating budget exceeding $120 million, "begged the treasury board for $26,000 to produce, gradually of course, some bilingual forms."

Spicer suggests treasury board allow departments and agencies to dip into a special bilingualism fund. But at the same time federal departments and agencies should be expected to plan bilingualism into their normal operating budgeting.

Spicer also strongly suggests that the departmental bilingual advisers be given more status and that their expertise be used more by federal administrators. Perhaps they could be made special adviser to each deputy minister. This upgrading would help integrate bilingualism into all operational programs, he suggests.

Spicer also said Western Canadians are not taking the federal government's biilingualism policy quite as seriously as they should be.

A French-Canadian in Vancouver claimed he failed his driver's test because he did not understand English well enough.

And French-Canadians in Alberta and British Columbia complained about the lack of French language service from Alberta Government Telephones and the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Spicer said he received a 5,000-signature petition demanding French television service for the Peace River area of Alberta. Action is being taken on the request and residents should have that service "in the near future."

BLOW FOR CONCORDE

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines announced Wednesday that they will not exercise their options to buy 13 Concordes, thus dealing the Anglo-French supersonic jet project a crippling and possibly fatal blow.

The action is expected to lead American Airlines and Eastern Air Lines — with a total of 11 options — to drop out also.

That leaves other airlines with options on 30. But the lack of competitive pressure from U.S. airlines is likely to cause some or all of them to cancel as well.

So far, the Concorde's manufacturers say they have firm orders for 14 models at $80 million: five from the British Overseas Airways Corp., four from Air France, three from China and two from Iran.

But with the moves by Pan Am and TWA, options to purchase a total of 23 planes now have been cancelled. United previously dropped its plans to buy six and Air Canada scrapped orders for four.

Prime Minister Edward Heath of Britain, now on a visit to Washington and reported to be disappointed at the Pan Am and TWA decisions, is expected to plead with President Nixon to grant U.S. landing rights for Concorde.

Heath declined to comment Wednesday on the decisions by the two airlines, but British sources in Washington said he retains his faith in the plane and continues to believe it will be a commercial success.

The British-French project has cost $2.5 billion so far.

Higher Pensions Likely For Vets

OTTAWA (CP) — A report of a study group that recommends a substantial increase in payments to the 153,285 Canadians receiving war-veterans' pensions was tabled in the Commons Wednesday.

If the report's recommendations are adopted, and Veterans Affairs Minister Daniel MacDonald has indicated he favors them, the basic 100-per-cent disability pension would go up to about $4,500 annually from about $3,900.

This would match the take-home pay of a composite group of unskilled public service employees and woud cost the government about $54 million more in 1973.

The report is the work of a group representing veterans' organizations, the veterans' department and the Canadian Pension Commission.

David Hunter of Vancouver, a national vice-president of the Royal Canadian Legion and national chairman of the legion's veterans' welfare advisory committee, says legion members are "very happy" with the recommendations.

"It will end a lot of frustration for some of these poor fellows that have been waiting for 35 or 40 years," he says.

He says former Veterans Affairs Minister Arthur Laing, who ordered the study, "was the first minister who handled the problem in 35 years in a proper manner."

Hunter and legion national president Bob Smellie of Winnipeg met with Laing and officials from his department last June.

Hunter says the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission, deputy minister for veterans' affairs and other senior officials met twice weekly from June until the end of September in order to speed up action on the pension lag.

HOPPERS TOO HEAVY

OTTAWA (CP) — Two thousand big grain-carrying hopper cars purchased last year by the government for $48 million can travel on only half the railway tracks in Western Canada, the Commons estimates committee was told Wednesday.

W. E. Jarvis, co-ordinator of the industry department's grains group, said that "something less than half the tracks can carry the cars once they are full of grain. The other half cannot take the weight of a full car."

He assured the committee, however, that CN and CP Rail can use other grain-carrying cars to move grain from places where the new cars cannot be used.

'Close Book of Life Quickly'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — "Let us close the book of life for the transgressor quickly, cleanly and finally," said Ian Arrol (PC — York East) Wednesday.

Using some of the most dramatic language so far in the Commons capital punishment debate, he called for a return of the death penalty — not necessarily hanging, if people object to that mode of execution.

He urged an end to what he termed twisted social values that give the criminal the break.

Another of the 35 MPs who have spoken in the debate on a government bill to extend the partial ban on capital punishment was Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro.

Munro told the Commons in his maiden speech that the government had missed the message" of the last election.

Not only were the Canadian people annoyed at taxation and economic policies, he said, but also they were urging the return of capital punishment.

"Our women folk can no longer go out in the evening to post a letter," he said.

His constituents were annoyed, he added.

"They are against the do-gooders and consultants being hoodwinked by a bunch of smart con-men into getting early paroles or leave passes on compassionate grounds.

"Where does compassion lie? What compassion had these miscreants when they snatched a purse from an elderly lady who had just cashed her pension cheque, or when they mutilated little girls and left them abandoned beside the road to be found by heartsick parents and angry neighbors?"

Since Friday when the debate started there have been 35 speakers, 21 for abolition of capital punishment and 14 for retention. There have been some qualifications.

It is expected there will be a free vote next week, perhaps Monday, on the bill that would suspend hanging for all killers except those of policemen and prison guards.

Jean-Marie Boisvert (SC — Drummond) also said he would vote against the bill while Antonio Thoms (L — Montreal Maisonneuve-Rosemont) said he wants capital punishment retained for premeditated murder.

Lloyd Crouse (PC — South Shore) said he has been a retentionist for years but would consider supporting a bill that would abolish hanging but put killers in jail for life.

John Reid (L — Kenora-Rainy River) said he has been an abolitionist but is concerned for the feeling of insecurity of the public about the release of prisoners on parole and on leave.

Cement, Peat Studied

He said B.C.'s share of financing the PTAC will be $30,000 annually, and the body is also partly supported by the National Harbors Board and Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

Macdonald said his "completely rejuvenated" department, formerly known as the department of industrial development, trade and commerce, will be retitled the department of industry and trade promotion.

It would have three new branches — promotion, business research and information.

He said the promotion branch would be responsible for promoting industrial development and trade, finding industrial prospects, identifying products in which B.C. has a natural advantage, identifying the market for those products and then "going out with trade missions to sell."

SPECIAL PROJECTS

The business research branch would investigate industrial opportunities, carry out special projects, market studies and feasibility studies. It would also, he hoped, list the "10 most wanted industries in B.C."

He added: "Based on that kind of research, I think we can help to bring to this province the kind of industries we need."

The minister said another section of the department, an industry branch based in Vancouver, would be charged with maintaining regular contact with all businesses in the province, even if that meant only an annual courtesy call or an inquiry to see if technical, financial or promotion expertise were needed.

Tongue firmly in cheek, Macdonald told the house he hopes his department will be a "modern, dynamic department of industry and trade promotion which will have awakened from a long slumber . . . raucously alive and electric with vitality."

When someone from the opposite side of the house asked if he would consider hiring "Waldo" (former Social Credit trade and commerce minister, Waldo Skillings) he replied that he didn't want to comment on his predecessor.

But he added, without pause: "I hope I don't let failure go to my head."

Referring to the chronic shortage of land available for industrial development, Macdonald said there was a "tremendous inflation" in land values and mentioned areas of the Fraser Valley which has risen swiftly in price from an average $9,000 per acre to $12,000 or $13,000.

He said he hopes the industrial development corporation which the government proposes to establish will acquire land to provide industrial sites in co-operation with municipalities.

Where necessary, these could be developed in advance with buildings and other facilities.

Hanoi Guards Sovereignty

the X in the president's name is in the form of a Fascist Swastika. It will be interesting to see if any of these banners demanding retaliatory repayment for the "blood debt" of American war damage are taken down when the president's personal emissary arrives in Hanoi.

In Hanoi last week, officials would speak only guardedly of their desires and plans for postwar reconstruction aid. Some officials conceded that their plans are only fragmentary at the present time, for as one said: "We are still digging our dead out of the rubble of American war damage."

One dominant theme pervaded every discussion of postwar reconstruction.

"We Vietnamese will make the decisions for ourselves, as we always have done."

North Vietnam has balanced so delicately in its relations with even its main Communist supporters, the Soviet Union and China, that they, too, are held at arms length even when their technicians and military advisers are working with North Vietnamese.

The extent of war damage to North Vietnam is so vast that a considerable effort will be required even to assess accurately what needs to be repaired, or demolished and rebuilt from the ground up. The heaviest damage is most recent, from the 12 days of massive bombing of the Hanoi-Haiphong region from Dec. 18 to 29 by B-52s and other aircraft, except for a 36-hour Christmas interlude.

This B-52 bombing eliminated most of the nation's meager industrial capacity that had survived the previous years of war during the Johnson and Nixon administrations.

Now only ruins are left of the industrial complex of Haiphong, industrial centers on the outskirts of Haiphong, the textile mills in the third largest city, Namdinh, iron and steel works and other large plants.

Current, embryonic attempts at "reconstruction" are concentrated on assembling bamboo sections of houses and shipping them into the cities and towns, along with oiled paper and poles to improvise residences to augment mud huts with thatched roofs, and houses built of bricks simply piled on top of each other without mortar.

The determination remains to rebuild only "in Vietnamese way." Questions about possible teams of foreign technicians, or plans for mass reconstruction of modernized cities, bring quick disclaimers: "We do not want cosmopolitan centers. Hanoi is not Tokyo. We want to keep Vietnam, Vietnam."

The Hanoi talk is of cranes, derricks, earth-moving equipment, steel for bridge repairs; in other words, the resources, rather than a vast influx of foreigners to plan or design or direct.

"Our economy relies mainly on agriculture," said Hoang Tung, editor of the main newspaper, Nhan Dan, and an alternate member of the central committee.

"The majority of our industrial establishment has been destroyed," said Tung, "now we will start over once again."

Courts to Reconsider Nishgas

government conceded the Nishga tribe had occupied the Nass Valley "since time immemorial."

While the decision is a severe setback for Indian claims, non-treaty Indians in other provinces base their land rights on different facts and circumstances.

So the issue is far from being dead legally.

Mr. Justice Wilfred Judson, writing reasons for himself and Mr. Justices Roland Ritchie and Ronald Martland, said the Nishgas did not come under the Royal Proclamation, known as the Indian bill of rights.

Judge Judson said it was obvious that the area claimed by the Nishga wasn't covered by the proclamation.

The territory, he said, came under British control only in 1846 with the signing by Great Britain and the United States of the Treaty of Oregon.

"The Oregon Treaty was, in effect, a treaty of cession, whereby U.S. claims were ceded to Great Britain," he said.

"There was no mention of Indian rights in any of the conventions or the treaty."

the weather

A Pacific disturbance has moved in across the Charlottes and winds have shifted to westrerly and the rain eased off to showers. Ahead of the system, southeasterly gales are pounding exposed parts of the B.C. coast with occasional rain in most coastal areas but heavier rain is reported on the West Coast of Vancouver Island. The disturbance will move eastward through the interior tonight with only a band of snow accompanying it. Snowfalls are expected to be quite light in most areas. Behind it the skies will remain cloudy with showers persisting along the coast and a few snow flurries in the interior.

Renegotiate Columbia—McGeer

and BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Liberal MLA Pat McGeer (Vancouver Point Grey) Wednesday urged the provincial government to renegotiate immediately the Columbia River Treaty with the United Staes and embark on an entirely new economic program of industrial expansion.

McGeer told the legislature B.C. has been bilked out of more than $360 million as a result of the treaty. And he said there is more than money at stake.

Not only has B.C. land been irrevocably damaged by the effects of the dams built as part of the Columbia project, but the U.S. has ended up with the lion's share of critical peaking power as well, he said.

The B.C. government must seek a renegotiation of the treaty, he said, and it must seek from the U.S. compensation for ecological damage caused and for peaking power lost.

McGeer said B.C.'s ace in the hole should be refusal to discuss any aspect of continental energy with the U.S. until the treaty is renegotiated.

"It will be a test of whether good will on the part of the United States extends to correcting an arrangement which is patently unfair to Canada," he said. "Never again should we sign any long-term energy contracts which do not provide adequate escape clauses."

McGeer said it is not only B.C. but the whole country which has lost out as a result of former premier W. A. C. Bennett's "extraordinarily foolish negotiating move."

"It won him an election, (in 1963) but it left us with an unparalleled mess on our doorsteps."

The bad effects of the whole Columbia agreement have extended to B.C. exports as well, McGeer said.

B.C. producers of aluminum, who already face stiff tariff barriers for exports into the United States, found that enterprisers in Washington and Oregon were able to take advantage of the cheap power provided by the American half of the Columbia agreement to produce aluminum at a lower cost than they could.

As a result, exports dropped and profits declined in those markets in which B.C. maintained a foothold, he said.

And this is felt not only in loss of tax revenue to the federal and provincial governments but also as increases on the province's unemployment rolls.

McGeer also told the house that it would be possible for the province to develop more than 1,000,000 new jobs in the next 15 years by producing sophisticated consumer goods and selling them to consumers around the world.

The Liberal MLA gave the example of the Phillips Corporation which is based in The Netherlands. He said Phillips had built itself up from almost nothing after the Second Wrold War to the point where it now employs more than 300,000 people, and another 1.5 million in connected service industries.

Examples like the Phillips story can be found all over the world, he said. Canada is sadly lacking in ability to develop new procesesses of technology. Although the gross national product has been climbing at a steady rate, that rate is not nearly as high as the rate for resource-oriented industries. That situation can not exist for long, however, he warned.

LIDEN
. . . freeze backed

Social Credit MLA Bob McClelland (Langley) criticized the government's freeze on development of farmland, saying the solution lies not in imposing freezes but in improving services to farmers so that farms can be more economic propositions.

The government can't keep a viable agricultural industry going by force, he told the house, and if the government believes this, it is "completely out of touch with the real reasons why a farmer chooses to till the soil."

One way of helping the farmer, he said, would be by improving the drainage system in many areas. Involuntary flooding of farmland only shortens the growing season for the farmer and raises the prices of home-grown products for the domestic consumer.

He called the government freeze the first step in a campaign for total control of all privately-owned land in the province.

Another speaker in the throne speech debate, Harold Steves (NDP — Richmond), countered McClelland's criticisms of the farmland freeze by calling it "the best thing this government has done to date."

As a former farmer himself, forced out of business by "a combination of bad agricultural legislation by the previous government and unjust municipal zoning bylaws," Steves said his only regret was that the halt had not be called earlier.

He said before 1956 his r ing had 24,000 acres of most fertile agricultural l in Canada. In that yeari one meeting of Richm council, and at the "urgi of certain land speculat half of that land was re for residential and indu use — including his own ily's farm.

The result was haz urban growth and "momental" costs in servic the scattered developmen with roads and drainage Steves said.

Freshman MLA Ca Linden (NDP — Delta) al backed the government's position on the farmland freeze. Linden said the farmers of his area are pleased with the government's action.

In a wide-ranging maiden speech, Linden also:

—pushed for a provincial department of fisheries;

—said the government should not allow the Burlington Northern Railway to extend its line through his riding along prime recreational land;

—sought an improved public transportation system for his riding.

NO ABORTION CLINICS YET

There are no plans for establishment of abortion clinics in B.C., Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Wednesday.

He said general hospitals in the province are already doing an adequate job in dealing with the demand for abortions and he does not favor the concept of abortion clinics.

Cocke said he does not expect that the demand for abortions will increase very much in the future unless the population increases dramatically. Hospitals are able to cope with abortions now, he said, so there is no need for additional facilities.

Cocke said abortion clinics are not a good idea because it means "we shoulder people with that job and that job alone. We don't want to do that."

He gave the example of a nurse who found that her only duties involved assisting at abortions. Such continued activity would be a severe emotional strain on an individual, he said.

Asked his opinion of abortion, Cocke said he favors family planning. As a result, his department has brought some aspects of birth control under the provincial medicare scheme, he said.

"We want to do more on the preventive end of it."

Press Conferences Draw Grit Fire

Liberal leader David Anderson Wednesday rebuked Premier Dave Barrett for making major policy statements at press conferences, instead of doing so on the floor of the legislature.

By ignoring the province's elected representatives in that way, he said, the premier's action is "an infringement of our privileges as members and in contempt of this legislature."

Rising on a point of order at the start of the afternoon's business, Anderson said as recently as last Friday a precedent was established whereby the house, "by consent," heard short policy statements from members of the executive council on "matters of public interest."

He was referring to statements by Barrett and Resources Minister Bob Williams dealing with measures taken to clean up the Alert Bay oil spill.

But since then, Anderson said, the premier made policy statements at two press conferences — one on the subject of a new coal port to be developed at Britannia and the other to announce establishment of a price review board for petroleum products.

Speaker Gordon Dowding told Anderson that the procedures of the B.C. legislature, unlike those of some other jurisdictions, do not allow ministers to make statements, or permit question periods, and therefore it would have been "out of order" for the minister in this case to make any statement "unless he had the floor."

Dowding said he would reserve judgment on Anderson's complaint.

Truce Teams Go Friday

Times News Services

SAIGON — The first 24 members of the four-power Vietnam truce observer team will disperse into the South Vietnamese countryside Friday, according to Michael Gauvin, head of the Canadian contingent.

The observers are being assigned posts despite the number of ceasefire violations being reported from different parts of the country. Heavy fighting is continuing in the northern provinces, but the number of attacks and counterattacks is decreasing.

The Saigon command said there were 188 Communist attacks during the 24 hours ending at 6 a.m. today, compared with 209 in the previous 24 hours, 311 in the 24 hours before that and 426 in the first 22 hours after the ceasefire went into effect.

Gauvin, acting chairman of the supervisory body, said inspection teams will be sent to three centres across South Vietnam.

Gauvin said three teams of eight soldiers each will visit facilities in Hue and Da Nang in northern South Vietnam and Pleiku in the central highlands.

Each team consists of two soldiers from each commission member country.

The three sites are among seven regional centres established under the Paris peace agreement for supervising the ceasefire.

The 130 Canadian troops and their supervisors have been ready to go into the field since Monday but their departure has been delayed by the lack of safeguards.

A delegation at the deputy head level was to meet today with representatives of the North Vietnam and Viet Cong delegations to the JMC, the first such meeting it has been possible to arrange.

A full meeting, at the ambassador level, was expected later in the day.

The ICCS met Wednesday with the other members of the JMC — the U.S. and South Vietnamese.

Gauvin has described the meetings with the Americans and South Vietnamese as "most satisfactory."

Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam of South Vietnam returned from Paris and Washington and said he believes the fighting will stop once the international truce teams are in place.

He said if there is a large North Vietnamese invasion, "the countries in the agreement are committed to act but it is up to them to decide what to do."

Six chartered jetliners carried about 1,200 U.S. servicemen home today, dropping U.S. troop strength in Vietnam below the 20,000 mark, the U.S. command said.

Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai accused the U.S. today of failing to stop its "war of aggression" against Cambodia and Laos despite signing the Vietnam peace agreement.

The premier, speaking at a Peking banquet honoring North Vietnamese chief negotiator LeDuc Tho and Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Thrinh, said he hopes the U.S. government and Saigon authorities will "refrain from procrastination, expansion and sabbotage" so that the peace agreement might be turned into a reality.

Meanwhile, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the exiled Cambodian leader, has decided to order his armed forces to stop all offensive attacks and has stated his readiness to reconcile himself with the U.S., Communist diplomatic sources said today.

Industry Boost Pledged

Trade Minister Alex Macdonald said Wednesday in the legislature he considers the price of concrete "excessively high" and added: "I think another cement industry is a perfectly feasible enterprise for B.C. to engage in . . .

"We have the limestone and we have a need for competition," he told the house.

He promised that all opportunities for developing secondary industry on the basis of resources now largely unexploited will be closely examined.

For example, he said the province is sitting on a "gold mine of peat", with large reserves on the Lower Mainland and in the Queen Charlotte Islands. This could prove to be of great importance to the province in creating jobs and export dollars.

Macdonald's comments came as he announced details of a "spanking new" department and new strategy to meet the pressing need for industrial reserves in the province.

DENIES HINT

The latter policy, he said, could extend to the building of warehouse and other facilities on fully-serviced sites which would be available on a lease basis where industrial operations are "logically able to survive."

Later, outside the house, the minister denied that he was hinting the government might enter the concrete business directly. He said he was only illustrating a case where the proposed industrial development corporation would be able to initiate action to help new enterprises.

On another aspect of the government's industrial philosophy, the minister said there will be emphasis on dispersing secondary industry throughout the province, to ensure that it doesn't all concentrate on the Lower Mainland.

Wherever possible, the new corporation would try to assist industries wishing to locate in the province's small towns, such as McBride, which would otherwise "go down the drain one by one" in 20 or 30 years' time.

ADVISORY BODY

Macdonald also announced the formation of a Pacific Council, by the governments of B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan, which will advise them "how to break the bottlenecks in the transportation system."

He said the councils' role in this field will be to study and advise on the transportation of grain, potash, sulphur, coal and other commodities and to concert the efforts of the western provinces where there are common problems.

Certainly, he added, such a problem does exist in terms of the present "freight rate discrimination against the West."

Macdonald's statement on the formation of the new body followed discussions he held earlier in January with Roy Romanow, Saskatchewan's attorney-general, and with Fred Peacock, minister of industry and commerce in Alberta.

Bombed Bus

British soldiers surround a bus in Belfast as N. Ireland police investigate bombing which took the life of a Roman Catholic worker and injured nine others.

Ulster IRA, UDA Heading Toward All-Out Warfare

BELFAST (AP) — Three teen-agers bombed a busload of Roman Catholic workers in a Belfast suburb today, killing one and injuring nine, as Northern Ireland's Catholic and Protestant guerrillas squared off for all-out war against each other.

Eyewitnesses said the three youths waved down the bus as it was on its way to the site of a new Catholic school. When it stopped, they threw the bomb inside, then escaped.

The bombing raised to 697 the confirmed death toll in 3½ years of religious warfare in Northern Ireland.

The militant Protestants of the Ulster Defence Association announced Tuesday that because of Irish Republican Army "provocations," they could no longer hold Protestant extremists in check and would not try.

The Catholics of the Irish Republican Army replied that they would take "ruthless retaliatory action" for the killing of Catholics. The Ulster Defence Association said this was "a virtual declaration of war."

Gunmen have killed five persons in Belfast since Monday. Four were Catholics, and three of those were teen-agers. The fifth was an Ulster Defence Association member.

The Irish Republican Army accused the Ulster Defence Association of giving a green light to sectarian killings "on the scale hitherto unknown." It said: "A new phase of sectarian killings will not be tolerated. The IRA will utilize all its resources to end sectarian killings for all time."

The Ulster Defence Association said the Irish Republican Army men are murderers and hypocrites, and "we will not permit them to thrive."

"The thunder clouds are gathering, and here are the first flashes of lightning," said one security officer.

The assassins continued working Wednesday night.

A cry of "Hey you!" halted a 17-year-old Catholic boy walking home in Belfast. When he turned, a gunman shot him in the stomach. His condition today was critical.

A police officer was shot in the back as he parked his car at his home in Downpatrick, County Down. Stray bullets went through a window of the house and hit his nine-year-old daughter. Both were in serious condition.

Nishga Case Not Over

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The federal government intends to send a ruling of the Supreme Court on Indian land rights back into the lap of the top court.

Justice Minister Otto Lang told the Commons Wednesday that he was dissatisfied with the split by seven members of the Supreme Court on the claim to northern land by the Nishga tribe and he intended to press Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien to demand that the matter be brought up again this time before the full nine-justice court.

Former prime minister John Diefenbaker had earlier asked the government to refer the question to a full bench "so this question can be settled once and for all."

Diefenbaker said the decision by the seven was not conclusive because three of the judges denied the appeal on its merits and three upheld it.

The seventh judge, Mr. Justice Louis-Philippe Pigeon, rejected the appeal on the technical grounds that it could come before the court only with the authorization of the lieutenant-governor of the province and this had not been obtained.

Wally Firth (NDP—Northwest Territories), a Metis, again asked the government to adopt as its own his motion to form a Commons committee that would investigate Indian land claims.

As a motion from a private member, it is doubtful if the move would ever be debated in this session of Parliament.

Government House leader Allan MacEachen said he would confer with Chretien soon on Firth's suggestion.

He said the judgment had implications far beyond British Columbia.

Hanoi Aid Terms

By MURREY MARDER
Washington Post

(Marder has just returned from a two-week reporting trip to North Vietnam. He was the only American newsman in that country when the ceasefire was announced.)

WASHINGTON — North Vietnam is anxious for foreign aid to help re-build its war-ravaged economy. But its war psychosis is still very much in evidence. In peace as in war, its officials emphasize, "no one will be permitted to infringe on our sovereignty."

The White House announcement Wednesday that presidential adviser Henry Kissinger will visit Hanoi Feb. 10-13 to discuss postwar relationships between the two nations is a swift move to begin healing the wounds of war. North Vietnam's leadership is evidently eager to begin the repair process quickly — for multiple reasons of its own.

Nothing more graphically issustrates the totally pragmatic and adaptive policies of North Vietnam when it decides that its vital interests are at stake than the decision of its leadership to receive Kissinger so quickly in their war-battered capital.

Right now, throughout Hanoi and most of the cities, towns and villages of North Vietnam, flamingly-illustrated billboards, banners and posters condemn President Nixon as the arch-criminal of the war. On some of the posters,

FULL RENT CURBS SET BY QUEBEC

QUEBEC (CP) — All rental housing in Quebec will be subject to rent controls in 1973 under legislation to be presented in the national assembly when it reconvenes Feb. 20, Justice Minister Jerome Choquette said Wednesday.

Choquette said the legislation resulted from "a very considerable number" of rent increases across the province.

In Montreal Tuesday a spokesman at the local rental control board office said more than 50,000 calls have poured into his office since Jan. 5 from tenants protesting rent hikes of up to 50 per cent.

Choquette told a news conference the bill, called a "law to prevent abusive increases in rents in 1973," will enable tenants who feel they are facing unnreasonable increases to take their case before a Quebec Rental Board.

The board, already in existence, is authorized to conciliate landlord-tenant disputes and knock down any rent increases it finds unjustified.

The rental board, which considers such things as improvements to the property and money laid out for such improvements, local economic conditions, the condition of the building and tax changes, can grant the rent increase asked by the landlord, order him to continue to provide the premises at the old rent, or set the rental at any figure between the old and the new, the justice minister said.

Bilingualism: Passing Frill?

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Too many top federal administrators continue to view bilingualism as a "passing and exceptional frill, a luxury to be tacked on to regular budgets only if normal operating budgets allow it," Keith Spicer, Commissioner of Official Languages, says in a report to Parliament released Wednesday.

And Spicer provides readers of his almost 600-page-long and, of course, bilingual report with some spicy examples of this attitude that would sour the heart of Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson.

For example, there was one department which had the seeming audacity to ask treasury board in 1972 for an additional $120,000 for bilingual signs.

Spicer adds that this request was presumably based on the premise that nowhere in the department's more-than-$300-million budget for 1971-72 could this "relatively modest sum be squeezed out."

Though not within his jurisdiction, Spicer dwelt on teaching second-language skills in Canada, and called it "a country-wide catastrophe."

Funds given the provinces to help pay for language training, to reach $300 million by 1974, have not produced the desired result, the report says, and Spicer has received many complaints about misuse of such funds by the provinces.

To help improve language-teaching programs Spicer suggests formation of a "linguistic volunteer corps" of students to act as native-speaking assistants to language teachers, an idea used successfully in West Germany and France.

The federal government is considering a pilot program of 200 such volunteers who would receive about $3,500 a year each, the report says.

Another department cited by Spicer, with a yearly operating budget exceeding $120 million, "begged the treasury board for $26,000 to produce, gradually of course, some bilingual forms."

Spicer suggests treasury board allow departments and agencies to dip into a special bilingualism fund. But at the same time federal departments and agencies should be expected to plan bilingualism into their normal operating budget.

Spicer also strongly suggests that the departmental bilingual advisers be given more status and that their expertise be used more by federal administrators. Perhaps they could be made special adviser to each deputy minister. This upgrading would help integrate bilingualism into all operational programs, he suggests.

Spicer also said Western Canadians are not taking the federal government's billingualism policy quite as seriously as they should be.

A French-Canadian in Vancouver claimed he failed his driver's test because he did not understand English well enough.

And French-Canadians in Alberta and British Columbia complained about the lack of French language service from Alberta Government Telephones and the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Spicer said he received a 5,000-signature petition demanding French television service for the Peace River area of Alberta. Action is being taken on the request and residents should have that service "in the near future."

BLOW FOR CONCORDE

Times News Services

NEW YORK — Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines announced Wednesday that they will not exercise their options to buy 13 Concordes, thus dealing the Anglo-French supersonic jet project a crippling and possibly fatal blow.

The action is expected to lead American Airlines and Eastern Air Lines — with a total of 11 options — to drop out also.

That leaves other airlines with options on 30. But the lack of competitive pressure from U.S. airlines is likely to cause some or all of them to cancel as well.

So far, the Concorde's manufacturers say they have firm orders for 14 models at $80 million: five from the British Overseas Airways Corp., four from Air France, three from China and two from Iran.

But with the moves by Pan Am and TWA, options to purchase a total of 23 planes now have been cancelled. United previously dropped its plans to buy six and Air Canada scrapped orders for four.

Prime Minister Edward Heath of Britain, now on a visit to Washington and reported to be disappointed at the Pan Am and TWA decisions, is expected to plead with President Nixon to grant U.S. landing rights for Concorde.

Heath declined to comment Wednesday on the decisions by the two airlines, but British sources in Washington said he retains his faith in the plane and continues to believe it will be a commercial success.

The British-French project has cost $2.5 billion so far.
